Prepare copies as required by the Oil Company plus one copy for the Petroleum Sales Representative and for District files.

7. List of Oil Company Outlets. The District must maintain a complete file of all Oil Company Controlled Outlets on whose purchases it has been agreed to pay sales commission.

Prepare another list of Oil Company outlets on whose purchases the BFG District Manager and the Oil Company Division Manager have agreed that no sales commission shall be paid. In general, this list of exceptions will include BFGS, BFG Warehouse Accounts and Oil Company Outlets major financed by B. F. Goodrich.

Refer any accounts which are questioned by the District Manager and which the Oil Company Division Manager refuses to approve and the list of exceptions to the Petroleum Sales Department, Akron, with all possible information, for discussion with the Oil Company Home Office to arrive at a decision.

8. Credit, Refund and Check Issued. Issue credit to each Oil Company Division Office for the amount of commission due on net purchases as shown on the report of purchases in the following manner:

A separate report is to be used for (1) salary operated, (2) consumption, and (3) sales on which sales commission is paid. If there are no sales in the first two classifications, prepare only the report for the third classification, and indicate thereon "No Sales to Salary Operated Accounts" and "No Sales For Consumption Accounts." When reporting (3), sales subject to commission, complete the "Commissions" section as provided for on the 1321-B. On Oil Companies other than Texas, strike out the "B-E-T" and "C-D" classifications under the "Commissions" section, and use only the percentage breakdown applicable in each case.

The sales reported on each Form 1321-B report rendered must be grouped according to the following classifications, and listed on the 1321-B in exactly the same order as shown here:

1. Sales by BPGS
2. Sales by Dealers and Distributors
3. Sales to Dealers

Distribute Form 1321-B as follows:

Dear Mr. Lewis:

You will recall that in a conversation in my office that Mr. Hoban felt there was no reason why Goodrich wouldn't be willing to include hereafter your sales to our dealers who are served by our distributors.

If you will kindly write confirming this we would like to ask our Division Offices to furnish your District Managers with the names of these dealers to complete their records.

We would like your letter as promptly as possible so that we can incorporate this matter in our revised instructions to our Divisions which are now in preparation.

Subject: THE TEXAS COMPANY

It is my understanding that although sales to Texas Company Distributors are eligible for the S-47, we have never placed on this report, direct sales to individual Stations serviced and controlled by a Distributor unless the property involved was owned by or leased to the Texas Company.

When we were last in New York, this subject was discussed in Mr. Bronson's office, I believe, in connection with the situation at Knoxville, Tennessee. During that conversation, you voiced no objections to such accounts being placed on the S-47. Since that is a change in general policy, Mr. Bronson apparently anticipates an announcement to his field organization so that Dealers of Distributors on placed on the TBA record. His letter asking for required confirmation is attached.

Perhaps our acceptance of these accounts should be on the basis of Paragraph 3 of our present Contract which states,

"Said commission will be paid upon all net purchases made by all of the above mentioned classifications of Texaco accounts, excepting, however, such "D" accounts as are not approved by The B. F. Goodrich Company, and such "C" accounts where their location would cause a conflict with our already established distribution."

On this basis, our District Managers would have an opportunity to review the accounts and approve for the S-47 only those on which Texas Company assistance in solicitation is desired.

May I discuss this with you before replying to Mr. Bronson?

Dear Mr. Lewis:

Attached is statement of active Texaco-Goodrich accounts by our Divisions and Territories and for all Territories as of July 1952 compared with the number of active accounts shown on our July 1951 reports. The number of accounts shown does not include those dealers purchasing TBA merchandise from a Texaco consignee or from another Texaco dealer. In other words, this statement represents only those accounts on which your District Offices report sales on our Forms 8-47 Monthly Report.

You will notice from these statements that in the majority of our Divisions, you are selling tires and tubes to either the same number or a fewer number of consignees and distributors than was the case this same time last year. The gains made in a few of the Divisions, however, brings your net loss of active "B" and "E" accounts down to a total of only 13 for all Territories. On the other hand, there are more active service station dealer accounts in the tire and tube section in almost all of our Divisions reports. In some Divisions this gain is considerable, which produces a total net increase for all Territories of 237 active tire and tube accounts of all types. This means that either your Territory salesman or the salesmen of your dealer distributors("O" type supply points) are selling on 237 more accounts now than they were in July 1951.

In all Territories, you will note there are 18 less consignees and distributors buying battery, auto supplies than was true in July 1951. For all types of accounts, there is a net increase of 154 as a result of the gain of 207 active service station dealers in the battery, auto supplies section.

As of July 1952, Goodrich tires and tubes were being sold to 2,736 Texaco accounts, whereas only 2,076 accounts were buying Goodrich battery, auto supplies. Thus, there is a difference of 660 so-called active Goodrich accounts where only a portion of

We believe you must agree that if The B. F. Goodrich Company would take the proper steps to bring this picture up to the desired balance, your 2% decrease in the sale of battery, auto supplies for the first 7 months of 1952 would be easily wiped out. May we suggest that you might want to institute a closer analysis by your Districts of the facts brought out in the attached statements to the end that not only the small decrease mentioned above would be wiped out, but more important, we believe you could produce a very substantial overall increase in TBA generally.

We would appreciate any comments on this subject you may wish to make.

Dear Mr. Lewis:

You are well aware of the fact that for sometime now we have been wrestling with the problem of trying to bring the ratio of battery and auto supply purchases to total TBA purchases by Texaco accounts up to a volume more in keeping with the balanced selling potentials recommended by the TBA industry as well as most oil companies. We believe that if more Texaco accounts are to enjoy the best possible profits from their TBA sales, the present ratios must be greatly improved. We also believe that only through the concerted efforts of your field selling organization and ours will we be successful in our attempted assistance to Texaco accounts in this respect.

In an effort to coordinate and to concentrate our efforts, we would in our opinion accomplish more if the field selling organizations were directed to institute an aggressive selling campaign with one particular type of account at a time. In this way we will avoid the fallacy practiced for the most part in the past of "scattering our shots" too thinly with only spotted results.

Of your TBA sales to Texaco accounts in 1951, our consignees and distributors' ("B" and "E" type accounts) purchases accounted for 47% of the total. Their ratio of batteries, auto supplies to total TBA purchases amounted to 16% as compared to a ratio of 28% in the purchases of batteries, auto supplies made by service station dealers ("C" and "D" type accounts). For the first eight months of 1952, the "B" and "E" accounts' purchases were 40% of your total sales to Texaco accounts, with a ratio of batteries, auto supplies to total volume of only 13%. The ratio to total B. F. Goodrich TBA purchased by "C" and "D" accounts for the same period was 21%. From this you can see that your company has lost still further ground in 1952 on your sales of batteries and auto supplies to both our wholesale and retail type accounts.

It is a known fact that the majority of our consignees and Faithfully yours

50 for Fifty Years

distributors who handle Goodrich tires and tubes do not handle Goodrich battery and auto supplies. Since they do represent 40% or better of your total sales to Texaco accounts, we are wondering if your office could formulate; first, a special battery and auto supply selling campaign for this type of Texaco account, which could be put into effect not later than January 1, 1953. We believe that if an aggressive and enthusiastic follow-through on such a special drive could be maintained from your office through your organization down to your District and Territory Managers, most of the obstacles encountered in the past in trying to sell our consignees and distributors on the idea of handling your batteries and auto supplies, in addition to tires and tubes, could be overcome. Their resistance for the most part has been due to their belief that the problems in connection with the maintenance of inventories and the sale of these items to their dealers were too great; and in addition that their percentage of profits to be realized were too small when compared to their experiences in the handling of tires and tubes alone.

We believe a strong sales story should be produced to convince the consignees and distributors that the overall percentage of profits from the handling of a complete TBA line will give them an adequate return on their investment with a nominal amount of selling and handling effort on their part.

Even if we were only successful in getting our consignees and distributors to add batteries to their TBA inventory, their profits and their services to Texaco dealers would be greatly improved.

Of course, when the best possible coverage has been accomplished with consignees and distributors, a similar program tailored to the battery and auto supply requirements of our service station dealers, who handle B. F. Goodrich tires and tubes, would then be in order.

If your company is desirous of this volume of battery and auto supply business and will develop a real selling campaign, you may rest assured that we, our Territorial and Division management, will wholeheartedly join with you in an all-out effort to improve the sales and profits of Texaco accounts through the handling of B. F. Goodrich's complete tire, tube, battery and auto supply line.

We would be interested in hearing further from you on this proposed selling campaign.

Very truly yours,

T. C. Wright

Gentlemen:

A study has been made of the 1952 TBA account analysis furnished us by all Divisions in accordance with our letter of December 5, 1952, this same subject.

From a consolidation prepared here of all Divisions' reports, we would like to point out certain facts which we believe you and your Division management will want to study carefully and where possible, take prompt action to improve the purchases by every type account.

The tires and tubes purchased from Firestone and Goodrich comprise our only records relating to these items. From these records, it appears that 11% of the active "B" (consignee) accounts and 16% of the active "E" (distributor) accounts amounted to less than $1,000 during the year 1952. Consignees and distributors are as a rule the wholesale supply source for a number of service station dealers. It, therefore, must be admitted that, unless other suppliers are being used to a substantial extent, such a wholesale account whose annual tire and tube purchases are less than $1,000 is not actually in the business. At least one must conclude that the service station dealers depending on these accounts for their tire and tube supplies have probably not received the service they rightfully expect and deserve.

Perhaps the most disturbing information developed from our study of this analysis is the fact that 55% of our active "C" (company owned and leased) accounts and 69% of the active "D" (contract dealers) purchased less than $1,000 in tires and tubes during the year. When we include the service station dealers whose purchases, according to our records, were between $1,000 and $2,499, we find that 82% of the "C" type dealers and 85% of the "D" type stations purchased less than $2,500 in tires and tubes during the year.

By referring to Forms S-1229 and S-1277, we find that our company-owned and leased stations averaged approximately 12,000 gallons of gasoline per month per station in 1952. If the "C" type accounts had, therefore, handled tires and tubes in keeping with the balanced selling ratios recommended on The Texas Company's "Profit Computer", they should have averaged better than $4,000 per year per account instead of the $1,861 as reflected from this analysis.

Commission's Exhibit 70C

Asst. Terr. Mgrs. - 2 - March 11, 1953 CX 10-70C

Of the accounts purchasing batteries and auto supplies, according to our records, we find the following percentages of each type account averaged less than $1,750 in total battery, auto supply purchases in 1952:

"B"	accounts	67%
"E"	"	68
"C"	"	91
"D"	"	96

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION
DOCKET NO. 6485 COMMISSION EXHIBIT NO. 70C

Again working with averages, we would like to point out that using the recommended balanced selling ratios suggested on our Profit Computer, the "C" type accounts should have averaged approximately $2,200 per station in battery, auto supply purchases in 1952. By comparing this with their actual purchases, which averaged only $720 per account, it is apparent that much still is to be done if our dealers are in this way to develop better balanced selling and increased profits. I am sure these dealers know that, according to tire company policy, extra discounts usually begin to apply only when an account's purchases of batteries and auto supplies are $1,750 or more per year.

A study of this type made by the Divisions of their own particular results will certainly provide plenty of food for thought. Then, if discussed and studied with each tire company District Manager at interest, it should provoke definite action by the field selling organizations. We believe you will want to pass this information along to each Division with the request that they make a similar study of their own analysis of each type of account, and I am sure you will have some definite recommendations as to the action they should take.

Very truly yours,

Manager

SHELL AMERICAN PETROLEUM COMPANY
ROBINO - INDIANA

Yesterday morning, I talked at length with "Bull" Durham and was told that they were having a meeting on Friday with the Goodyear people and probably would go forward in 1953 on a split basis.

The reasons were given as shortages of merchandise during 1952 and previous years, and also due to lack of close attention to some of their accounts.

I re-iterated to Mr. Durham a number of the things which we talked about in Kokomo a few weeks ago, and further intimated that we very probably would be assigning a man to work with their accounts immediately.

I asked "Bull" if he would hold off making any definite commitment until after we had a chance to further discuss the matter and to tell our story more completely at their TBA meeting in Kokomo on January 29. I got no assurance that they would hold off, although "Bull" did tell me that he was still very strong for BFG and was only opening the door for better handling of their accounts.

I covered a number of the pitfalls in a dual-supply situation and the breaking down of a positive selling approach when the dealer or the customer had choices.

Following my discussion with Mr. Durham, I talked with both Mr. Reichert and Mr. Cordry and urged them to step up their contacts and dating activity with all Shell American accounts, as I feel if we can get a dating order with a great number of the Shell American outlets, we will be keeping Goodyear out of the picture for at least the time being.

Subject SHELL AMERICAN

Please pardon the delay in writing you, as you requested over the phone, an opinion on our status with Shell accounts - just in case.

Our sales to stations for the first ten months of 1952 were $95,498. Of this volume, more than one third came from one account and over one half is this account plus two others or from three accounts. The total from the three accounts was $54,302. The balance of $41,000 came from the multitude of other stations - approximately 100 outlets, with the "main balance" activity in South Bend.

The No. 1 account, Walmer, would definitely stay with us. He is no longer in the Shell station, but is now set up as the Plymouth Tire Company. I explained this to you over the phone. So his business we will retain regardless. I can say that definitely because Thursday or Friday of last week I had a talk with Mr. Walmer about it. He supplies eight Shell stations. The volume from them is not great and they would probably be lost, with the exception perhaps of the station he formerly operated in Plymouth because his successor owes him $8000 on a note in connection with the take-over. Mr. Walmer expects his tire business to be markedly increased this year over last because he is giving full time to it, whereas in previous years, as you know, the station responsibility took most of his time. His dating order is approximately $18,000.

Vance Good is in a leased station, volume $13,313 for 11 months of 1952, dating order approximately $1000. He would have to do as his gasoline supplier says.

Bob Good, $7,250 volume for 11 months of 1952, no dating order - same story as Vance on and result.

In summation, all I can assure on retaining would be about one third of the business (Walmer's business) which volume I expect increased to at least $50,000 this year. In my opinion, I think we would have no trouble replacing the entire volume due to the fact that in some markets we have "held an umbrella" over the Shell Stations to the point where they are open or weak markets and with them definitely open, I would certainly put pressure on territory managers for replacement and plussing up of the return from the markets.

Exclusive of Walmer and Vance Good, we have taken dating orders from Shell accounts totaling $6,620. Most of these orders have been shipped and the remaining orders are being gotten out immediately.

IMPORTANT

We are pleased to announce an exclusive marketing relationship with the Continental Oil Company whereby B. F. Goodrich tires, tubes, batteries, accessories and auto supplies will be made available to Conoco outlets. The B. F. Goodrich organization will do the direct selling of these outlets, supported by the promotional assistance of the oil company and its entire field organization.

Continental, with its familiar red triangle trademark "Conoco", markets gasoline, oils and lubricants in 26 mid-continent states known as "Conocoland." (Conocoland map attached.) Although new in the field of TBA, Continental's principal roots date back to 1911 and the present company was formed in 1929.

The company and its management are recognized leaders in the oil industry and a vigorous future is being built on an illustrious past. Continental is known for handling each new venture exceptionally well.

B. F. Goodrich is extremely fortunate to be associated with Continental at the very outset of its TBA program, and is proud to have been selected after consideration of all principal tire manufacturers. Conoco dealers, jobbers and commission representatives provide opportunity for many new outlets of the high standard you are seeking. You will find Continental personnel to be of the highest type and most friendly and cooperative.

B. F. Goodrich TBA merchandise will be sold through Conoco outlets under the sales commission plan, details of which will be announced later. Selection and training of the Continental TBA staff and field TBA representatives must precede training of the general field sales organization and Conoco outlets. These activities will proceed as rapidly as possible.

Meanwhile, activation of the program in your area may begin in several ways. Get-acquainted visits and exchanges of information on company organization, policies and methods should be carried on with Continental field management personnel. Study of Continental distribution will help you formulate the best plan for exploiting the program as it unfolds. Actual solicitation by BFG personnel of immediate prospects among Conoco outlets may start at once following these discussions with Continental field management. (A list of field headquarters and personnel is attached.)

This BFG-Continental association materially strengthens your 1952 opportunities for better coverage -- increased sales and profits. A fast but carefully planned start will earn maximum benefits for your area.

Gentlemen:

In consideration of the services to be rendered by your sales organization in promoting the sale of B. F. Goodrich tires, tubes, batteries, and auto and home supplies by us direct to your Dealers, Distributors and Jobbers, we agree to pay to you a sales commission on our net sales of such products to any Ohio Oil Company Dealer, Distributor or Jobber handling Marathon gasoline, subject to any exceptions provided below, said rate of commission to be the rate set opposite each of the following classifications:

OHIO OIL COMPANY

At W. A. Cr[illegible]'s request and following arrangements made by him with Grant Young (Asst. Retail Mgr. of Ohio Oil Company), I visited Mr. Young and his associates at Findlay on Friday, October 10. My mission was to provide general information of the sales commission plan of TBA operation as Ohio Oil is seriously weighing a change to this type of program. In addition to Mr. Young, the following men attended parts of the discussions: Messrs. Dickerson (Market Analyst), Buescher (Retail Manager), Loos (Purchasing), Fiskal (Credit), and Tull (Legal).

General subject matter covered included:

Channels through which merchandise flows to the dealer.

Oil company responsibilities under the sales commission plan.

Rates of commission.

Justification of commission rates.

BFG oil company distribution in Ohio Oil Company marketing area.

Reasons for Ohio Oil interest in nationally advertised tire and the commission plan.

Nature and function of BFG stores.

COMMISSION'S EXHIBIT NO. [illegible]
IN THE MATTER OF [illegible]
DATE [illegible]

Mr. Young revealed that Ohio's principal TBA interests are centered on 762 "investment" stations located in southern Illinois, Indiana, western Kentucky, and Ohio. In addition, there are in excess of 900 good stations not classified as investments. There are about 50 jobber bulk plants around Ohio's fringe, but these have not been a factor in TBA.

At the close of the more general discussions, I requested an opportunity to discuss BFG qualifications under the commission plan if and when they might decide to make a change. Mr. Young stated that they are at that point right now and would like an early meeting to study present BFG distribution in the area they cover. He suggested the week of November 2nd, subject to later confirmation.

Dissatisfaction with the Miller line and their present method of TBA operation (purchase and resale) was attributed to:

Increased costs of promotion, solicitation, and distribution without corresponding increase in margins.

Difficulty in providing supply points close to their retailers, permitting competitive delivery service.

It is my opinion that Ohio Oil will definitely change to a nationally advertised line and the sales commission plan. Considering their present dealings, Goodyear or Firestone can and will sell them on a sales commission basis unless we step in at once. Pending discussion, I shall start preliminary work on the area information they request.

OHIO OIL COMPANY

The visit Mr. Morledge and I made in Findlay on February 26 developed the following.

We have agreed to devote the efforts of four special men during the initial stages of solicitation, one to be permanent and three for whatever number of weeks may be required to cover the area initially.

Ohio Oil Company requests that we stock batteries in district warehouses from which a sizeable number of Marathon outlets will be serviced.

We are requested to stock a streamline assortment of auto supplies at the Indianapolis warehouse or make a comparable line through six or eight BFG stores in Central and Southern Indiana. Both Mr. Morledge and Ohio Oil Company management prefer use of the Indianapolis District Warehouse.

Principal question on which earliest possible word is required involves the stocks of Miller tires, tubes, and accessories which will be on hand on the cut-off day for TBA shipments by the Ohio Oil Company. As I understand it, that cut-off day may be one to two months after LFG solicitation starts and we will be allowed an additional thirty days for disposition of warehouse stocks. This means a total period of sixty to ninety days for liquidation. Meanwhile, every effort will be made to reduce stocks to a workable minimum.

We have agreed to assist Ohio Oil in liquidating full unbroken cartons of current auto supply items which are also a part of our line. Such merchandise will either be returned to the manufacturer without penality, or BFG will purchase where practical to do so at BFG buying price and the manufacturer's normal terms. Mr. Morledge will work this out.

Ohio Oil hopes that Miller will not make a "last ditch effort" to hold dealers and distributors that are willing to switch to BFG. They would like some assurance of BFG policy in this respect.

There is a large wholesaler at Ann Arbor, Michigan which has been doing a very large volume with Goodyear. We will be called upon to solicit immediately. This may prove to be a severe conflict. You may wish to check with Mr. Parnell.

As you know, we left two copies of our suggested letter of agreement, a copy of which is attached to this memo. Mr. Buechner or Mr. Young would like to talk with you by telephone as early next week as you find it practical to do so. At that time, they would like clarification of the questions posed above, principally the problem of Miller stock. They will also suggest the final step and report on the status of our letter of agreement.

EMBLEM OIL COMPANY
DIVISION OF UNITED REFINING COMPANY
WARREN, PENNSYLVANIA

On Tuesday, May 5, Mr. Hugh R. Logan, General Manager and Treasurer of Emblem Oil Company, phoned me from Warren, Pennsylvania requesting an opportunity to discuss a TBA marketing plan similar to that now being inaugurated with Ohio Oil Company. It seems that Mr. Logan had recently been in touch with Ohio Oil's management.

Emblem Oil is now on a purchase and resale basis and last year bought $80,000 in BFG merchandise through our Buffalo District. It is George Empson's opinion that total potential for the outlets involved would not exceed $150,000. Mr. Logan reported that the Company owns and operates more than 90 vehicles, but we have no way of knowing what portion of their BFG purchases have been going to this use.

The Elk Refining Company with headquarters at Charleston, West Virginia is also a Division of United Refining and is now handling Firestone merchandise on purchase and resale. If Emblem and Elk were combined, total volume might equal four to five hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. Logan has asked that I phone him on May 18 and, if possible, go visit him at Warren, Pennsylvania shortly thereafter. I feel that the call should be made, although present information indicates that purchase and resale is the proper marketing method for this relatively small account. It is quite probable that competition is also being invited to discuss TBA and our present as well as potential interests for the future undoubtedly should be protected.

Messrs. J. K. Pannill (5)
L. F. Raymond (5)
D. B. Monroe (5)
H. E. Paul (4)

Gentlemen:

We are working very closely with the management of the tire companies in an effort to formulate plans which we think will help to overcome, during 1953, many of our TBA sales obstacles. If we are to attack these problems successfully, and produce the desired improvement, it will be necessary for our respective organizations to carefully examine the present sales activities on these products with Texaco consignees, distributors, and dealers.

Jointly with each tire company, we expect, first to inaugurate a specific campaign with reference to interesting Texaco consignees and distributors in selling a complete line of TBA products. Particular stress will be laid on those who now handle tires and tubes but do not handle batteries and auto supplies. Similar promotions will also be worked out later for the service station dealers. We propose to launch these campaigns in the nature of a program to be followed throughout the year rather than a concerted drive of short duration. Certain statistics on results obtained in 1952 will be necessary in order to assist us in developing these programs.

Will you please request the Divisions to prepare a statement as per sample attached for each type of Texaco account ("B", "E", "C" and "D"). Each individual account's total 1952 purchases will be the determining factor when grouping them into the various dollar volume brackets shown.

Separate statements in duplicate covering purchases from Firestone and from Goodrich should be furnished this office not later than February 15, 1953. The information necessary for the preparation of these statements will be readily available from Form S-40 cards just as soon as the December Forms S-47 have been posted.

We direct your particular attention to the note at the bottom of the sample statement. The supplemental statements called for are to cover the purchases by consignees and distributors who operate, in whole or in part, retail stores handling a more or less complete line of tire company products.

Sufficient copies of this letter and attachment are furnished you for forwarding one copy to each Division.

Very truly yours,

/S/ Norton Bronson

Dear Mr. Bronson:

B. F. Goodrich will, in accordance with our verbal understanding covered in a prior discussion, pay The Texas Company a service commission of five per cent (5%) on the sale of B. F. Goodrich TBA merchandise sold on extended credit terms to holders of Texaco credit cards.

This program became effective September 1, 1955. Details covering our Operating Instructions to the B. F. Goodrich Stores selling Texaco gasoline who are affected by this program have been sent to you in accordance with your request.

Dear Mr. Bronson:

B. F. Goodrich will, effective October 1, 1955, pay The Texas Company a commission of 2½% on the sale of recapped tires produced from B. F. Goodrich Camelback sold to Texas Company by B. F. Goodrich approved supply point distributors.

As you know, our former program covered the sale of recapped tires produced in B. F. Goodrich store-operated recap plants only. There is no change in our former program and the sale of such recapped tires that are produced in those plants will still be subject to the regular rate of commission.

This change in program clears up a problem that has existed for some time, due to the fact that independent distributors operating their own recap plant have sold recapped tires to your dealers and there was no provision to include such sales in your sales volume on which commissions have been paid.

Operating Instructions covering the procedure for handling this new phase of our marketing program will be issued within the next few days and sufficient copies will be forwarded to you for distribution to your organization.

Very truly yours,

Together with all appurtenances thereto and all right, title and interest of lessor in and to any and all roads, streets and ways bounding the said premises;

Together with the buildings, improvements, fixtures, equipment and facilities of the lessor now located on said premises as follows:

(2)—Term. TO HAVE AND TO HOLD for the term of _____ years, from and after the _____ day of _____, Nineteen Hundred _____ (_____, 19____) but subject to termination by lessee at the end of the first year or any subsequent year upon thirty (30) days' prior written notice from lessee to lessor.

Commission's Exhibit 1098

(2)—Rental. Lessee agrees to pay the following rent by said premises:—

Lessee agrees that rental shall be payable in monthly installments and that if any installment thereof shall be due and unpaid for ten (10) days after written notice of such default has been delivered to the demised premises or the lessee, at its place of business as shown in this lease, lessor shall then have the right to terminate this lease on thirty (30) days' written notice to lessee.

Lessee, at its option, may apply at any time such rental or any installment thereof to the payment of any indebtedness due or to become due from lessee to lessor. Such application shall be deemed payment of such rental.

(4)—Maintenance. Lessee agrees to maintain said premises and improvements, fixtures, plumbing, heating, and electric wiring, in good repair, and to paint same according to lessee's specifications when deemed necessary by the opinion of the lessee during the term of this lease, and to rebuild within sixty (60) days any structures on said premises damaged or destroyed, in the event of lessee's failure to do so, lessee, at its election, may either terminate the lease on thirty (30) days' notice to lessee, in which event rental shall abate from the date of destruction or damage, or do the necessary repairing or rebuilding at the expense of the lessee and have the right to apply accruing rentals for the purpose of reimbursing itself for the principal expenditure, together with interest at six per cent. If, prior to and/or during the time the premises are undergoing repairs, the use thereof by lessee is materially interfered with, the rent accruing during such period or periods shall be abated.

START

(5)—Removal of Property. Lessee shall have the right at any time during the continuance of this lease or within thirty (30) days after its termination to move and remove all buildings, and improvements, fixtures, equipment and other property owned by lessee or placed on said premises by lessee during the term of this or any previous lease, or any extension or renewal thereof.

(6)—Lessee's Right of Termination. Should lessee be prevented from establishing or continuing the business of distributing petroleum products on the whole or any part of said premises, due to any law, ordinance or regulation by any Federal, State or Municipal authority, or due to any restriction on said premises and said restriction is not removed within ninety (90) days from the date thereof, then, in either of such events, lessee may terminate this lease upon giving lessor thirty (30) days' written notice of termination, in which event lessee shall be relieved of all obligations under this lease, including all liability for rent from the date lessee was prevented in any manner from conducting such business, and all rental obligations shall be adjusted between the parties as of such date. If, during the term of this lease, a part only of said premises be taken for public use under right of eminent domain, and if the remainder, in the opinion of the lessee, is not suitable for its purpose, lessee, at its option, may cancel and terminate this lease, but if it shall not elect so to do, the monthly rental thereafter to be paid shall be reduced by an amount which bears the same ratio to that herein provided for as the area taken bears to the total area prior to such taking.

(7)—Damages for Defect in Title. Lessor covenants that he is well seized of said premises, has good right to lease the same, and warrants and agrees to defend the title thereto; and to reimburse and hold lessee harmless from all damages and expenses which lessee may suffer by reason of any restriction, encumbrance or defect in such title.

(8)—Taxes and Encumbrances. Lessor agrees to pay all taxes, assessments and obligations which are or may become a lien on the demised premises and improvements as they become due. If lessor should fail to do so, lessee shall have the right to make such payments for the account of lessor, in which event it shall be subrogated to all the rights of the holder of such lien, and in addition thereto shall have the right to apply accruing rentals in satisfaction of such obligations; or lessee, in the event of a foreclosure of any such lien and the sale of said demised premises and improvements, shall have the right to buy in said premises and improvements for its own account.

(9)—Options to Purchase. Lessor hereby grants to lessee the exclusive right, at lessee's option, to purchase the demised premises, together with all structures, improvements, and equipment thereon, free and clear of all liens and encumbrances (including leases which were not on the premises at the date of this lease) at any time during the term of this lease or any extension or renewal thereof, _____dollars, it being understood that if any part of said premises be condemned, the amount of damages awarded to or accepted by lessor as a result thereof shall be deducted from said sum; (b) on the same terms and at the same price as any bona fide offer for said premises received by lessor and which offer lessor desires to accept. Upon receipt of a bona fide offer, and each time any such offer is received, lessor shall immediately notify lessee in writing of the full details of such offer, including the name and address of the offeror, whereupon lessee shall have thirty (30) days after receipt of such notice in which to elect to exercise lessee's prior right to purchase. No sale of or transfer of title to said premises shall be binding on lessee unless and until the foregoing requirements are fully complied with. If lessee elects to exercise lessee's prior right to purchase pursuant to any such bona fide offer, it is agreed that the terms and conditions set forth in the next to the last paragraph hereof shall govern such purchase.

Each such option herein granted shall be independent of the other, shall be pre-emptive and continuing, and shall be binding upon lessor, lessor's heirs, devisees, legal representatives, successors and assigns. The election by lessee not to purchase said premises in the case of any bona fide offer referred to in (b) above shall not terminate or in any wise affect either of such options but each shall thereafter continue unaffected as set forth in this paragraph.

Upon receipt of lessee's notice of election to exercise either of the options granted herein, which notice shall be given in accordance with the Notice Clause of this lease, lessor shall immediately deliver to lessee, at lessor's expense, a complete abstract of title or other evidence of title satisfactory to lessee, and shall also furnish, at lessor's expense, an up-to-date survey by a licensed or registered professional engineer or surveyor showing elevation of property and corners marked with concrete monuments, upon receipt of which the lessee shall have a reasonable time in which to examine title, and upon completion of such examination, if title is found satisfactory, and upon tender of the purchase price to lessor, lessor shall promptly deliver to lessee a good and sufficient Warranty Deed conveying the premises to lessee free and clear of all encumbrances (including, but without limiting, any rights of dower or curtesy). All rentals and taxes shall be prorated between grantor and grantee to the date of delivery of the aforesaid deed.

Lessee's notice of election to purchase pursuant to either of the options granted in this clause shall be sufficient if deposited in the mail addressed to lessor or if sent by telegraph at or before midnight of the day on which the option period expires.

(10)—Application of Option Purchase Price. In event accruing rentals are insufficient to reimburse lessee for expenditures made by lessee as authorized hereunder, and in event lessee exercises the option to purchase the demised premises, lessee may apply such part of the purchase price as is necessary to (a) completely reimburse itself for such expenditures and (b) pay any other indebtedness of lessor to lessee, together with interest at six per cent.

(11)—Option to Extend Term. (a) The lessor hereby grants to lessee the right and option to extend this lease for Lessee shall notify lessor in writing of his election to extend this lease along with plans relative to the date of the expiration of the term of this lease and subject thereto shall be deemed exercised if given in the manner hereinafter provided.

(b) If at any time during the term of this lease or any extension or renewal thereof, lessor shall receive a bona fide offer to lease the demised premises for a term to begin immediately on the expiration thereof, or any extension or renewal thereof, and lessor desires to accept such offer, lessor shall immediately submit to lessee a written copy of such offer with a full disclosure of all terms and provisions thereof and lessee shall have thirty (30) days after receipt thereof in which to elect to lease/sell privileges upon the same terms and provisions contained in such offer.

(c) In the event lessor is granted an option to extend under the provisions of paragraph (11)(a), it is agreed that if lessee does not in any instance elect to lease said premises in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (11)(b), such failure shall in no way limit or affect lessee's right and option to extend this lease as provided in paragraph (11)(a).

(12)—Holdover. If, at the expiration or termination of this lease or any extension thereof, lessee shall hold over for any reason, the tenancy of lessee thereafter shall be from month to month only, and be subject to all other terms and conditions of this lease, in the absence of a written agreement to the contrary.

(13)—Assignment and Sub-Letting. Lessee consents that lessor may assign or sub-let the premises, provided that lessee shall remain liable to lessor for the performance of all the terms hereof.

(14)—Notice. Notices from lessee to lessor shall be sufficient if delivered to lessor, or if sent by telegraph, or if placed in the United States mails addressed to the lessor at the address shown in this lease. Notices from lessor to lessee shall be sufficient if posted in the United States mails, postage prepaid, addressed to the lessee's place of business as shown in this lease.

(15)—Change in Ownership. No change in ownership, assignment of this lease, or assignment of rentals hereunder shall be binding upon lessee unless and until lessee has been furnished either the original instrument evidencing such transfer, or assignment, or a true copy thereof.

(16)—Successors and Assigns. This agreement shall be binding upon and shall inure to the benefit of the parties hereto and their respective successors or assigns.

(17)—Entirety of Agreement. No prior stipulation, agreement or understanding, verbal or otherwise, of the parties or their agents shall be valid or enforceable unless embodied in the provisions of this lease.

(18)—Approval and Signing by Lessee. This agreement, whatever the circumstances, shall not be binding on the lessee unless and until approved and signed in its behalf by an Executive Officer, or any of the following employees of the Domestic Sales Department: General Manager, Assistant General Manager, Manager Dealer Sales, Assistant to Manager, Manager Real Estate Division, Territorial Manager, Assistant Territorial Manager or Division Manager.

(4)—Maintenance. (a) During the term of this lease, lessee shall at lessee's expense make minor repairs to said premises, buildings and improvements, including repairs to plumbing, heating equipment, electrical wiring and fixtures, and replace broken windows, provided the total cost of said repairs and/or replacement of windows does not exceed $50.00 at any one time. Lessee agrees to paint the buildings and improvements whenever it deems such painting necessary.

(b) Lessee agrees at lessee's expense to make all other repairs to the said premises, buildings and improvements, equipment and fixtures furnished by lessor, and to keep the same in good repair during the term of this lease, as well as to replace any equipment furnished by lessor which becomes worn-out or damaged and cannot in the opinion of lessee, be placed in first-class condition by reasonable repairs. In event lessor shall fail promptly to make repairs or replacements as provided for herein, lessee is authorized to make the necessary repairs or replacements and to apply accruing rentals to reimburse itself for such expenditures.

(c) Lessor further agrees that in the event any structures on said premises are damaged or destroyed, lessor shall notify lessee within twenty (20) days from the date of such destruction or damage whether or not lessor intends to restore the premises to their former condition and if lessor so elects to restore the premises to their former condition, lessor shall replace within sixty (60) days any such structures damaged or destroyed. If lessor fails to notify lessee within said twenty (20) day period or notifies lessee that lessor does not intend to restore the premises, or fails to restore the same, lessee at its election may immediately terminate the lease effective as of the date the damage or destruction occurred, in which event rental shall abate from the date of destruction or damage, or do the necessary repairing or rebuilding itself and have the right to apply accruing rentals to reimburse itself for the principal expenditure, together with interest at six per cent. (6)—Lessee's Right of Termination. Should lessee be prevented from establishing or continuing the business of distributing petroleum products on the whole or any part of said premises due to any law, ordinance or regulation by any Federal, State or Municipal authority, or due to any restrictions on said premises, and such prevention is not removed within ninety (90) days from the date thereof, then, in delay of such remedy, lessee may terminate this lease upon giving lessor thirty (30) days' written notice of termination, to which event lessee shall be relieved of all obligations under this lease, including all liability for rent from the date lessee was prevented by any governmental body from conducting such business, and all rental adjustments shall be adjusted between the parties as of such date. (4)—Ownership and Removal of Buildings and Property. All buildings, improvements, fixtures, equipment, and other property owned by the lessee, or erected or placed on said premises by lessee during the term of this lease, or any extension or renewal thereof, shall be the property of and belong exclusively to the lessee, free from any lien or encumbrance. It is understood that the lessee has the right to remove or replace buildings, fixtures, aboveground equipment, underground tanks and other removable property at any time during the term of this lease at its sole discretion, and that upon the termination of this lease as herein provided or otherwise, the lessee shall have the right to sever and remove from said premises all buildings, improvements, fixtures, equipment and other property owned by the lessee or erected or placed upon said premises by the lessee. It is understood, however, that the lessee is under no obligation to remove the same or any part thereof, but that in the event of lessee's failure to do so within thirty (30) days after the date of the termination of this lease, such buildings and improvements not removed from said premises shall become the sole property of the lessor.

(5)—Lessee's Right of Termination. Should lessee be prevented from establishing or continuing the business of distributing petroleum products on the whole or any part of said premises, due to any law, ordinance or regulation by any Federal, State or Municipal authority, or due to any restriction on said premises and said restriction is not removed within ninety (90) days from the date thereof, then, in either of such events, lessee may terminate this lease upon giving lessor thirty (30) days' written notice of termination, in which event lessee shall be relieved of all obligations under this lease, including all liability for rent from the date lessee was prevented in any manner from conducting such business, and all rental adjustments shall be adjusted between the parties as of such date. If, during the term of this lease, a part only of said premises be taken for public use under right of eminent domain, and if the remainder, in the opinion of the lessee, is not suitable for its purposes, lessee, at its option, may cancel and terminate this lease, but if it shall not elect so to do, the monthly rental thereafter to be paid shall be reduced by an amount which bears the same ratio to that herein provided for as the area taken bears to the total area prior to such taking.

(6)—Damages by Suits to Title. (a) Lessor covenants that he is well seized of said premises, has good right to lease the same, that said premises are free and clear of all liens or encumbrances, except as hereinabove set forth, and covenants and agrees to defend the title thereto; and at lessee's own expense agrees to furnish lessee with an abstract of title or a title policy brought down to date; and to reimburse and hold lessee harmless from all damages and expenses which lessee may suffer by reason of any restriction, encumbrance or defect in such title.

(b) Liens and Encumbrances:

(7)—Destruction by Fire, etc. If, by fire, earthquake, the elements or any cause not due to lessee's negligence, the improvements now or hereafter existing on said premises are destroyed or so damaged as substantially to interfere with the business of lessee and/or its sub-tenants, or any of them, lessee shall have the right at its option, to be exercised within ten (10) days after such event, to terminate this lease and shall be thereupon released from all further obligations hereunder. Such termination shall be effective as of the date of such destruction or damage and lessee shall repay to lessor any rentals paid in advance for the time subsequent to such damage or destruction.

(8)—Taxes.

(9)—Assessments. Lessee shall in no event be responsible for or assume any obligation to pay any extraordinary or future assessments for street or sidewalk construction, paving or improvements, street repairs, street widenings, sewers, water lines, or assessments of any character imposed with respect to the demised premises, and the lessor agrees to assume all obligations to pay such assessments.

(10)—Water Rents. Lessee agrees to pay all water rents accruing upon said property for any period falling wholly within the term of this lease and a proper pro rata part of any such water rents for any period falling partly within said term.

(11)—Options to Purchase. Lessor hereby grants to lessee the exclusive right, at lessee's option, to purchase the demised premises, together with all structures, improvements, and equipment thereon, free and clear of all liens and encumbrances (including leases which were not on the premises at the date of this lease) at any time during the term of this lease or any extension or renewal thereof,

understood that if any part of said premises be condemned, the amount of damages awarded to or accepted by lessor as a result thereof shall be deducted from said sum;

(b) on the same terms and at the same price as any bona fide offer for such premises received by lessor and which offer lessor desires to accept. Upon receipt of a bona fide offer, and each time any such offer is received, lessor shall immediately notify lessee in writing of the full details of such offer, including the name and address of the offerer, whereupon lessee shall have thirty (30) days after receipt of such notice in which to elect to exercise lessee's prior right to purchase. No sale of or transfer of title to said premises shall be binding on lessee unless and until the foregoing requirements are fully complied with. If lessee elects to exercise lessee's prior right to purchase pursuant to any such bona fide offer, it is agreed that the terms and conditions set forth in the next to the last paragraph hereof shall govern such purchase.

Each such option herein granted shall be independent of the other, shall be pre-emptive and continuing, and shall be binding upon lessor, lessor's heirs, devisees, legal representatives, successors and assigns. The election by lessee not to purchase said premises in the case of any bona fide offer referred to in (b) above shall not terminate or in any wise affect either of such options but such shall thereafter continue unaffected as set forth in this paragraph.

Upon receipt of lessee's notice of election to exercise either of the options granted herein, which notice shall be given in accordance with the Notice Clause of this lease, lessor shall immediately deliver to lessee, at lessor's expense, a complete abstract of title or other evidence of title satisfactory to lessee and shall also furnish, at lessor's expense, an up-to-date survey by a licensed or registered professional engineer or surveyor showing elevation of property and corners marked with aluminum monuments, upon receipt of which the lessee shall have a reasonable time in which to examine title, and upon completion of such examination, if title is found unmarketable or unsatisfactory, and upon tender of the purchase price by lessee, lessor shall promptly deliver to lessee a good and sufficient warranty deed conveying the premises to lessee free and clear of all encumbrances (including, but without limitation, any rights of dower, or curtesy). All rentals and taxes shall be prorated between grantor and grantee to the date of delivery of the aforesaid deed.

Lessee's notice of election to purchase pursuant to either of the options granted in this clause shall be sufficient if deposited in the mail addressed to lessor or if sent by telegraph at or before midnight of the day on which the option period expires.

DISTRICT NO. 6485 EXHIBIT NO. 4193-C

(10)—Option to Purchase. Lessor hereby grants to lessee the exclusive option, of lessor's option to purchase the described premises, together with all structures, improvements, and equipment thereon, free and clear of all liens and encumbrances, including leases, (which were not on the premises at the date of this lease) at any time during the term of this lease or any extension or renewal thereof,

(a) for the sum of _____ dollars; it being understood that if any part of said premises be condemned, the amount of damages awarded to or accepted by lessor as a result thereof shall be deducted from such price,

(b) on the same terms and at the same price as any bona fide offer for said premises received by lessor and which offer lessor desires to accept. Upon receipt of a bona fide offer, and each time any such offer is received, lessor (or his assigns) shall immediately notify lessee, in writing, of the full details of such offer, including the name and address of any offeror, whereupon lessee shall have thirty (30) days after receipt of such notice in which to elect to exercise lessee's prior right to purchase. No sale of or transfer of title to said premises shall be binding on lessee unless and until these requirements are fully complied with.

Any option herein granted shall be continuing and pre-emptive, binding on the lessor's heirs, devisees, administrators, executors, or assigns, and the failure of lessee to exercise same in any one case shall not affect lessee's right to exercise such option in other cases thereafter arising during the term of this lease or any extension or renewal thereof.

Upon receipt of lessee's notice of election to exercise any option granted herein, which notice shall be given in accordance with the Notice Clause of this lease, lessor shall immediately deliver to lessee, at lessee's expense, a complete Abstract of Title or other evidence of title satisfactory to lessee, and shall also furnish, at lessee's expense, an up-to-date survey by a licensed or registered professional engineer or surveyor showing elevations of property and corners marked with concrete monuments. Upon receipt of which the lessee shall have a reasonable time in which to examine title and upon completion of such examination if title is found satisfactory, shall tender the purchase price to lessor, and lessor shall thereupon deliver to lessee a good and sufficient Warranty Deed conveying the property to the lessee free and clear of all encumbrances (including without limiting the foregoing the rights of dower and/or curtesy). All rentals and taxes shall be prorated between grantor and grantee to the date of delivery of the aforesaid deed.

Lessee's notice of election to purchase pursuant to either of the options granted in this clause shall be sufficient if deposited in the mail addressed to lessor or if sent by telegraph at or before midnight of the day on which option period expires.

(11)—Application of Option Purchase Price. In event accruing rentals are insufficient to reimburse lessee for expenditures made by lessee as authorized hereunder, and in event lessee exercises the option to purchase the demised premises, lessee may apply such part of the purchase price of as is necessary to (a) completely reimburse itself for such expenditures and (b) pay any other indebtedness of lessor to lessee, together with interest at six per cent.

Lessee shall notify lessor in writing of its election to extend this lease sixty (60) days prior to the date of the expiration of the term of this lease and notice thereof shall be deemed sufficient if given in the manner hereinafter provided.

(b) If at any time during the term of this lease or any extension or renewal thereof, lessor shall receive a bona fide offer to lease the demised premises for a term to begin subsequent to the then current term or any extension or renewal thereof, and lessor desires to accept such offer, lessor shall immediately submit to lessee a true copy of such offer with a full disclosure of all terms and provisions thereof and lessee shall have thirty (30) days after receipt thereof in which to elect to lease said premises upon the same terms and provisions contained in such offer.

(c) In the event lessee is granted an option to extend under the provisions of paragraph (12) (a), it is agreed that if lessee does not in any instance elect to enter said premises in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (12) (b), such failure shall in no way limit or affect lessee's right and option to extend this lease as provided in paragraph (12) (a).

(13)—Holdover. If, at the expiration or termination of this lease or any extension thereof, lessee shall hold over for any reason, the tenancy of lessee thereafter shall be from month to month only and be subject to all other terms and conditions of this lease, in the absence of a written agreement to the contrary.

Dear Mr. Dodge:

In consideration of the assistance and cooperation to be given The B. F. Goodrich Company by your sales organization in promoting the sale of Goodrich products, The B. F. Goodrich Company will pay The Texas Company, effective as of March 1st, 1940, a sales commission of five (5) per cent on all net purchases of Goodrich tires, tubes, batteries and auto supplies sold by Goodrich to the following classification of accounts:

(1) All Texaco Dealers operating locations owned in fee by The Texas Company (except where such locations are leased to Goodrich and operated by it as one of its stores).

(2) All Texaco Dealers operating locations leased to The Texas Company (except where such locations are subleased to Goodrich and operated by it as one of its stores).

(3) All Texaco Consignees.

(4) All Texaco Distributors.

The term "net purchases" is defined as total billings at net invoiced price, less all returned goods, and other allowances, discounts and credits except volume bonus and cash discount.

In addition, The B. F. Goodrich Company will pay to The Texas Company a commission of five (5) percent on all sales (i.e. made at any outlet selling Texaco products) of the aforesaid merchandise (excepting auto supplies) made through the use of Texaco credit cards, such commission to be figured against the net amount of the charge accepted by The Texas Company.

This agreement will continue in force until terminated by either party on one hundred and twenty (120) days' written notice to the other.

Yours very truly,

THE B. F. GOODRICH COMPANY

Dear Mr. Hedge:

This will confirm our understanding that the agreement between us, dated March 7, 1940, in respect to the sales commission payable by Goodrich to you on our sales of tires, tubes, batteries and auto supplies to Texaco Dealers, Consignees and Distributors, is amended so as to include our sales of such products to transport haulers, other than consignees and distributors, with whom you have contracts for the transportation of your products from one point to another on the basis of an agreed haulage rate.

It is understood, of course, that our tires and tubes will be sold by us direct to such haulers and that credit given the haulers will be on our own responsibility and that we will account to you monthly for the regular commission rate of 5% on all such sales.

Please indicate your acceptance of the foregoing below and return the original to the undersigned, retaining the duplicate copy for your files.

Very truly yours,

Mr. H. A. Wright
The Texas Company
135 East 42nd Street
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Wright:

This is to confirm arrangements for sales commissions on M. D. merchandise sold to Texas outlets as specified in our agreement and The Texas Company's buying price on this merchandise for salaried stations and consumption.

Effective August 1, 1941, our sales commissions on M. D. merchandise will be 5% on sales at Dealer and Distributor Prices and 2½% on sales at Jobber Prices.

On purchases by your company for company operated stations and consumption, we shall bill M. D. merchandise at Distributor Prices, waiving the $250 initial order and $1,000 Minimum Volume requirement. The 5% Warehouse Allowance and Annual Bonus for Volume will be passed as earned.

The sales commission revenue received by your company should be considerably improved under this arrangement since our M. D. Program will bring increased sales through expansion of the lines of merchandise available.

Very truly yours,

DATE OCT 18 1956 WITNESS
ACE REPORTING CO., Official Re

AGREEMENT made and entered into, at the place and on the date of acceptance shown below, between the undersigned DEALER and THE B. F. GOODRICH COMPANY, with general business offices at Akron, Ohio, wherein it is mutually agreed as follows:

1. PRODUCTS: B. F. Goodrich agrees to sell and deliver to the Dealer and the Dealer agrees to purchase and receive from B. F. Goodrich, during the term of this Agreement, the following B. F. Goodrich products (strike through any products to be excluded):

Passenger Car Tires	Industrial Tires
Truck & Bus Tires	Batteries
Farm Tires	Accessories & Repair Materials

The Dealer agrees to specialize in and aggressively promote the sale and distribution of such products, to equip his place of business suitably for the sale and service thereof and, if available, to carry a complete line in stock at all times in sufficient quantity to insure prompt service, recommending B. F. Goodrich products at all times and refraining from substituting other merchandise when B. F. Goodrich products are requested by the customer. The Dealer also agrees to encourage the specification of B. F. Goodrich tires as original equipment on commercial, industrial and farm vehicles and to help customers get the best results therefrom.

2. ADVERTISING: The Dealer agrees to properly maintain and to display prominently at its place of business all signs and to use all advertising materials supplied to it by B. F. Goodrich from time to time. The Dealer further agrees to display B. F. Goodrich products prominently in its showrooms and show windows, but not to exhibit such merchandise at any fair, show or other exhibit without first securing B. F. Goodrich's written consent.

3. ORDERS: All orders placed hereunder shall be in writing or, if placed by phone or wire, shall be supported later by written order, setting forth in detail the product, size, type or other description and quantity, and shall be subject to acceptance by B. F. Goodrich at its district office or warehouse, if and to the extent stock is available for delivery therefrom, or by B. F. Goodrich at its factory if delivery is to be made from the factory; provided, however, that no acceptance of any order, which when added to prior orders results in the total dollar amount of the Dealer's accumulated and unfilled purchases on order for any product being in excess of fifty per cent (50%) of the Dealer's purchases of such product during the preceding six months, shall be binding on B. F. Goodrich unless signed in writing at Akron, Ohio, by its General Manager of Tire Merchandising, or the General Manager of B. F. Goodrich Replacement Tire Sales.

4. PRICES: The Dealer agrees to pay, for all products delivered hereunder, the net prices, plus taxes and separate charges, if any, applicable to the Dealer as determined by B. F. Goodrich and in effect on the date of shipment.

5. TERMS: The Dealer will pay for all products delivered hereunder in accordance with the regular terms of payment in effect on the date of shipment. If the Dealer should fail to make any payment when due, or if the Company at any time should become dissatisfied as to the Dealer's financial responsibility, B. F. Goodrich may refuse to make further shipments hereunder except for cash and the payment in full of the Dealer's account or, if B. F. Goodrich so elects, it may terminate the Agreement without advance notice to the Dealer.

6. PRICE PROTECTION: In consideration of the Dealer's agreement to carry an adequate stock of tires, B. F. Goodrich agrees that if at any time during the term of this Agreement it should make any general downward revision in its recommended consumer list prices for tires concurrently with a decline in its net prices to the Dealer therefor (no price protection in case of revision in net prices, discounts, bonus or allowances to Dealers only), B. F. Goodrich will protect the Dealer in accordance with B. F. Goodrich's price protection policy in effect at the time of any such price revision. The Dealer agrees that any merchandise credit granted under such price protection policy shall be used on or before the December 31 next following the date of its allowance, and any portion of any such credit not so used shall be subject to cancellation by B. F. Goodrich. Price protection will not be allowed on any tires delivered to the Dealer in exchange for others returned by it, or on imperfect, discontinued or other tires purchased at special prices. B. F. Goodrich's decision as to what constitutes imperfect, discontinued, or other special priced tires to be final and conclusive.

7. DELIVERIES: All deliveries hereunder shall be made and title shall pass to the Dealer f.o.b. transportation facilities at point of shipment; otherwise, the terms of shipment shall be in accordance with B. F. Goodrich's regular policy in effect at the date of shipment. All orders accepted are subject to, and B. F. Goodrich shall not be liable for, any delay or failure to deliver when caused by fire, flood, accident, labor troubles, consequences of foreign or domestic wars, insurrections or riots, government orders or requirements, interruptions or shortages of fuel, raw materials, or transportation facilities, or other causes beyond its reasonable control, whether similar or dissimilar to those named. In the event B. F. Goodrich is unable, due to any of the foregoing contingencies or otherwise, to fulfill its total commitments to all customers, Dealer agrees to accept, in full and complete performance by B. F. Goodrich of its obligations hereunder, deliveries in accordance with such allocations as B. F. Goodrich may make.

8. ADJUSTMENTS: All first-class B. F. Goodrich products are warranted to be free from defects in workmanship and material, and will be adjusted in accordance with B. F. Goodrich's guarantee and adjustment policy in effect on the date of resale to the consumer. The Dealer agrees to prepay all transportation charges on all products returned to B. F. Goodrich for adjustment. It is understood that this Agreement does not confer on the Dealer any authority to warrant any product sold hereunder, nor any authority to make adjustments on behalf of B. F. Goodrich, except as set forth in B. F. Goodrich's guarantee and adjustment policy.

9. EXCHANGES: The dealer agrees not to return for exchange or credit any product delivered hereunder without B. F. Goodrich's prior written approval. Upon the return of any product with B. F. Goodrich's approval, the Dealer agrees to prepay all transportation charges and accept credit therefor at the net invoiced price or the price in effect at the time such product is received by B. F. Goodrich, whichever is lower, less B. F. Goodrich's regular service charge then in effect to cover its cost of handling.

10. IDENTIFICATION: Title to all such signs furnished to the Dealer shall remain in B. F. Goodrich, regardless of whether the Dealer shares in the cost of the erection and maintenance or pays for the sign thereof. On any termination of this Agreement, or upon request by B. F. Goodrich, the Dealer agrees to remove and return to B. F. Goodrich any or all such signs and, in the event of the Dealer's failure to do so, B. F. This Agreement is personal to the parties hereto and neither it nor any rights arising out of it can be assigned or transferred by either party, either voluntarily or by operation of law, without the written consent of the other party.

This Agreement may be signed without alteration of printed condition and so terminated in its entirety for B. F. Goodrich by the General Manager of Tire Merchandising, or by the General Manager, any Zone Manager, or any District Manager of B. F. Goodrich Replacement Tire Sales or by any Officer of B. F. Goodrich. Its provisions may be altered, waived or modified only in writing signed by the Dealer and by one of B. F. Goodrich's aforesaid Managers or Officers, but no alteration, waiver or modification shall be effected by the routine acknowledgment or acceptance by B. F. Goodrich of an order containing additional or different conditions.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the parties hereto have signed and accepted this Agreement in duplicate, each of which of all to be considered an original, by their respective officers or employees thereunto duly authorized.

8. ADJUSTMENTS: All first-class B. F. Goodrich products are warranted to be free from defects in workmanship and material, and will be adjusted in accordance with B. F. Goodrich's guarantee and adjustment policy in effect on the date of resale to the consumer. The Dealer agrees to prepay all transportation charges on all products returned to B. F. Goodrich for adjustment. It is understood that this Agreement does not confer on the Dealer any authority to warrant any product sold hereunder, nor any authority to make adjustments on behalf of B. 11. DURATION: This Agreement shall become effective upon the date of B. F. Goodrich's acceptance in the place provided below and shall continue in full force and effect, except as hereinabove provided, until terminated by either party upon five (5) days' written notice to the other. Upon any such termination, B. F. Goodrich may refuse to accept any orders aggregating in excess of the average five (5) days' requirements of the Dealer based on deliveries to the Dealer hereunder during the preceding twelve (12) months or portion thereof in which the Agreement has been in effect. This termination, however, shall release the Dealer from its obligation to make payment in accordance with the provisions hereof for any merchandise delivered hereunder.

12. GENERAL: This Agreement, which supersedes and cancels all other contracts relating to the subject matter hereof, except the Dealer's obligation to make full payment for any merchandise purchased thereunder, HAS BEEN ENTERED INTO ONLY UNDER THE INDUCEMENTS AND REPRESENTATIONS HEREIN EXPRESSED AND SETS FORTH THE ENTIRE AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE PARTIES HERETO, with the exception of any applicable written Fair Trade Agreements providing for resale price maintenance under Fair Trade laws. This Agreement is personal to the parties hereto and neither it nor any rights arising out of it can be assigned or transferred by either party, either voluntarily or by operation of law, without the written consent of the other party.

This Agreement may be signed without alteration of printed condition under mentioned in its entirety for B. F. Goodrich by the General Manager of Tire Merchandising, or by the General Manager, any Zone Manager, or any District Manager of B. F. Goodrich Replacement Tire Sales or by any Officer of B. F. Goodrich. Its provisions may be altered, waived or modified only in writing signed by the Dealer and by one of B. F. Goodrich's aforesaid Managers or Officers, but no alteration, waiver or modification shall be effected by the routine acknowledgement or acceptance by B. F. Goodrich of an order containing additional or different conditions.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the parties hereto have signed and accepted this Agreement in duplicate, each of which shall be considered an original, by their respective officers or employees thereunto duly authorized.

Commission's Exhibit 150B

2. To sublet no part of said premises, and that no assignment of or encumbrance upon this lease shall be made or suffered to be placed upon Lessee's interest hereunder, voluntarily or by operation of law, without Conoco's written consent. If any party herein named as a lessee should die during the period specified above, the term hereof shall run only to the time of said death. No consent to one assignment or sublease shall be construed as a consent to any further assignment or sublease, or to permit any assignee or sublessee to make any assignment or sublease, and no assent, express or implied, to any breach of any one or more of the covenants or agreements hereof shall be a waiver of any succeeding or other breach.

3. Not to commit or suffer waste to be committed upon the said premises and to make no alterations in or additions to the premises without the written consent of Conoco first had and obtained, except that Lessee may and agrees to make such alterations in or on the leased equipment as may from time to time be necessary to identify the products being dispensed from such equipment.

4. Lessee shall in case of fire or other damage to premises give immediate notice thereof to Conoco. If the premises shall be partially damaged by fire or other cause without negligence chargeable to Lessee some shall be repaired at Conoco's option and expense as speedily as practicable. During the period needed for such repairs the rent hereunder shall not cease if station can be operated. If certain improvements and/or equipment are totally destroyed by fire, act of God, or other cause, or so damaged thereby that Conoco deems it necessary to rebuild the same, Conoco may terminate this lease by written notice or at its option may rebuild or replace said improvements and/or equipment and the rent in such case shall cease only during the period required for such rebuilding or replacements. If such destruction or damage last referred to shall be caused by the negligence or improper conduct of Lessee, or any agent or servant of Lessee, it shall be optional with Conoco whether the last preceding sentence shall apply or Lessee shall be liable to Conoco for the full amount of rent herein reserved, and, in either case, Lessee shall be liable for all loss to Conoco.

5. To protect Conoco from and indemnify it against all loss sustained and expenses incurred by reason of any liability of any character incurred by Lessee, or arising out of or in connection with the maintenance, use and operation of said premises, as a service station during the term hereof, including any liability for injury to persons or property due to or arising out of the condition of said premises or otherwise.

6. To comply at Lessee's expense with all federal, state, municipal and other governmental and local laws, rules, regulations, and ordinances relating to said premises and/or relating to or arising out of the operation of said service station thereon, and not to use said premises in any way in violation of the laws of the United States, or state laws, or local ordinances or regulations, or any insurance policies thereon. Lessee shall comply with the following provisions, which it is agreed are necessary as safety measures in connection with the operation of said premises:

(a) Not to smoke on said premises or permit smoking on said premises.

(b) Not to permit any intoxicated person to remain on said premises. No intoxicants shall be used thereon by Lessee or kept or allowed to remain or be used thereon, and no intoxicated person shall operate or take part in the operation of said station.

(c) Not to permit the accumulation of oil, grease, or gasoline on the floor of any building covered hereby, or the accumulation of oil, grease, gasoline, ice or snow on any driveway covered hereby.

(d) Not to store, keep, or sell gasoline on said premises in or through any glass containers other than a pump, or store, keep, or sell gasoline on said premises in any container not properly labeled.

(e) Not to use gasoline for cleaning purposes on said premises.

(f) To provide covered metal containers for disposal of waste, empty one and five-quart oil and grease cans, and for oily rags, and to use said containers to help keep down fire hazard.

(g) If any tool or equipment covered by this lease shall become defective, Lessee shall not use or permit the use thereof.

7. To keep said premises and that portion of the streets, alleys, sidewalks and driveways immediately adjacent thereto neat [illegible], and said premises in an orderly and attractive condition. Conoco may inspect premises at any reasonable time.

8. Lessee has received said premises in good order and condition and will keep the same in good order and condition and at the [illegible]ration or other termination of this lease will yield up the same to Conoco in as good order and condition as when same were [illegible]ered upon by said Lessee, loss by fire, act of God, or ordinary wear excepted, and will promptly make all necessary minor re[illegible]irs and replacements such as replacement of gasoline, air, and water hose, window lights, electric light globes, and items of similar nature. If Lessee fails to comply with any agreement of Lessee as to keeping the premises in good condition, Conoco may put the same in the condition as provided for and Lessee shall reimburse Conoco for the expense incurred by it in doing so.

9. If said premises or any part thereof shall be condemned or taken for any public purpose, Conoco may forthwith terminate this lease by written notice to Lessee.

10. If Conoco shall make any payment by reason of the failure of Lessee to keep any agreement herein, all amounts so paid, together with all interest, costs or damages, shall at Conoco's option become a part of the rent becoming due on the rent payment day next succeeding such payments respectively.

11. Conoco and Lessee recognize the deterioration in value of premises permitted to remain idle and agree if the premises hereby leased shall not be used for any period of thirty consecutive days for the purposes for which the same are leased, this lease shall terminate at the expiration of such thirty-day period.

12. The agreements of Lessee herein shall be deemed conditions and if default shall be made in any of them, or if the premises shall become vacant, Conoco at its election may declare this lease ended and re-enter the premises, or any part thereof, with or without process of law and expel, remove and put out Lessee, or any other person or persons occupying, in or upon the same, using such force as necessary, and Lessee agrees to surrender said premises peaceably to Conoco immediately upon the expiration or termination of this lease, however terminated, and that upon the non-payment of the whole or any portion of said rent at the time the same is promised to be paid, or upon the violation or non-fulfillment of any of the covenants of this lease, Conoco may at its election either distrain for said rent due and damages sustained or declare this lease at an end and recover possession as if said premises were held by forcible detainer, said Lessee hereby waiving any notice of such election and any demand for the possession of said premises and any legal rights Lessee may have under the exemption laws of the state in which said premises are located, or in such case Conoco at its option may, without terminating this lease, rent said premises for such rent and upon such conditions as it may think best, making such changes and repairs as may be required, giving credit for the rent so received during such term, less all expense of such changes and repairs and the expense of any proceedings which may have been necessary in order to regain possession of said premises, and the cost of re-letting the same and Lessee shall be liable for the balance of the rent herein reserved and upon the other obligations assumed herein until the expiration of the term hereof; provided Conoco at its option, after re-letting said premises under this paragraph, may, nevertheless, terminate this lease at the end of any such period of re-letting, and if Conoco shall take possession under this paragraph, Lessee may not re-enter without Conoco's consent. Any remedy to Conoco specified herein shall be in addition to any remedy which it would otherwise have.

13. If Lessee, after the expiration or termination hereof, shall remain in possession of said premises with Conoco's consent, and continue to pay rent, without written agreement as to such possession, then Lessee shall be regarded as a tenant from month to month at a monthly rental, the amount of which for each month, shall be the rental above specified for that respective month, and which shall be payable monthly in advance as hereinabove provided subject to the covenants and conditions herein.

14. Conoco shall furnish so far as the same shall be reasonably available, free of cost to Lessee, rest room supplies for use at said station, of such kinds as Conoco shall select; but if Lessee fails to keep a proper amount of said supplies in rest room or rooms, Conoco shall no longer be obliged to furnish the same. Lessee shall pay all license, occupation, excise and other fees, taxes and assessments on the business conducted on said premises or sales made therefrom.

15. In case said real estate or any of the other property leased hereby is held by Conoco under a lease under which lessor in said lease retains [illegible] right to cancel and terminate said lease upon giving certain notice to Conoco, or in case of certain contingency, and said lease or [illegible] by Conoco is so cancelled or terminated by such lessor without default by Conoco, this lease shall also thereupon terminate, and Lessee agrees to comply with the terms and conditions of any such lease so held by Conoco except the payment of rentals thereunder.

16. If Lessee during the existence of this lease shall purchase automotive lubricating oils and/or greases from Conoco at the same prices extended by Conoco to retail dealers generally at the place where said premises are located, at the respective times of purchase by Lessee, in any quantity upon which quantity discount would be allowed by Conoco if purchased by any such retail dealer at the place where said premises are located, under written contract made on the date hereof, Conoco shall allow the same quantity discount to Lessee.

17. It is mutually agreed that none of the provisions of this lease shall be construed as reserving to Conoco any right to exercise any control over the business or operations of Lessee conducted upon the leased premises or to direct in any respect the manner in which any such business and operations shall be conducted. No party or parties employed by Lessee shall in any event be considered as employed by Conoco. Any such party or parties shall be hired by Lessee at Lessee's expense, and shall be paid and discharged by Lessee.

18. This lease constitutes the entire agreement as to the subjects covered hereby. No verbal agreement exists concerning the same. Any and all existing agreements on said subjects, including any existing lease by Conoco to Lessee covering said premises or part of same, are hereby cancelled. Any notice by Conoco to Lessee hereunder may be given by mailing the same by registered mail addressed to Lessee at Lessee's address given above.

19. This lease shall inure to the benefit of and be binding upon the heirs, executors, administrators, successors and assigns of the parties hereto, subject to the provisions hereof relating to assignment.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF the parties hereto have executed this agreement the day and year first above written.

Invoices covering the sale of such merchandise and services will be prepared and handled in identically the same manner as outlined for the handling of sales made on Texaco National Credit Cards.

TO TEXACO DEALERS:

The Texas Company reserves the right to cancel at any time, on notice to Dealer, the Dealer's privilege of honoring Texaco National Credit Cards, Texaco Commercial Order Books or McColl-Frontenac Oil Company Limited Credit Cards, on failure of Dealer to handle sales on such Credit Cards or Order Books in the manner outlined on this information card.

Dealers should understand that in making sales to authorized holders of Texaco National Credit Cards, Texaco Commercial Order Books, and Credit Cards of McColl-Frontenac Oil Company Limited, they are not acting as agents for The Texas Company. The sale is made by the Dealer directly to the customer and The Texas Company, in turn, purchases from the Dealer the customer's account receivable. In other words, The Texas Company pays the Dealer on behalf of the customer and assumes the credit risk, provided the procedure for handling as outlined on this information card is observed.

TEXACO DEALERS

Gentlemen:

The poster "INFORMATION FOR TEXACO DEALERS AND SERVICE STATION ATTENDANTS" was recently forwarded to you. It is of the utmost importance that each S-199D invoice be prepared exactly in accordance with instructions so that it will be complete and lawfully correct.

Accounts involved in bankruptcy, probate courts, disputed or delinquent - generally require that the S-199D credit card invoices be presented in court as evidence.

Courts will not accept S-199D invoices which are not complete and legally correct - such invoices being thrown out and disallowed, meaning that The Texas Company takes a loss on such sales.

For this reason it is extremely important that the invoices be prepared in accordance with instructions ... nothing can be left off or incomplete ... nothing can be assumed, abbreviated or left to guess work. The invoice as prepared by the dealer must stand on its own.

Here are some of the deficiences most frequently encountered in the handling of invoices for collection:

(a Presentation of Credit Card - The presentation of a valid (unexpired) credit card by the customer at time of purchase constitutes authority for the credit sale. NO SALE SHOULD BE MADE UNLESS UNEXPIRED CREDIT CARD IS PRESENTED.

(b Signature - Customer's full signature on the S-199D legally proves delivery of the merchandise ... initials are insufficient.

(c Customer's Name and Address - This, plus the correct credit card number must be clearly shown and transcribed on the S-199D invoice - exactly as is shown on the credit card. This, together with the signature appearing on the invoice, leaves no doubt as to who made the purchase and who is responsible for the payment of the account.

(d Dealer's Name and Address - The Dealer should show his complete name, address, city and state, so that - if necessary, it can be proved that he made the delivery and assigned the account to The Texas Company through the medium of the assignment clause as referred to on the Form S-98.

Commission's Exhibit 1838

(e The Date - Date of sale is extremely important, as it is evidence that the products were sold to the customer by the Dealer on an exact date. This may seem technical - but it is a very definite requirement of the courts.

(f Product delivered - The quantity, price, tax, total price and amount must all be shown as indicated on the sample S-1990 invoice on the poster. In some instances, Dealers have listed the word "Accessories" or the abbreviation "acces", without naming in detail the accessory and spelling out what it is. If the customer purchases a wind shield wipper blade - it should be so listed, and not merely as "accessory".

(g Unauthorized Sale - The court will look at the terms and conditions and authorized products sold as shown on the reverse side of the credit card; therefore, only those items authorized are to be sold on the card. Such items as "used tires", "used batteries", "repairs", "labor", "parts", etc., are definitely not acceptable, nor are they a legitimate sale under the terms of the credit card.

(h Customer's Goodwill - To retain the goodwill of our customers, Texaco Dealers should make every effort to protect the customer's interest. If the Dealer is requested to make sales of unusual amounts, or if the sale is made under suspicious circumstances, Dealer should satisfy himself that some unscrupulous person is not mis-using the credit card. If Dealer does not do this, he is not protecting his interest and is not rendering the proper service to a customer.

(i Form S-98 - This form includes an assignment clause, which gives The Texas Company legal title to the account - and, in addition to the Dealer's rubber stamp impression, it is signed by him, or in his name by his authorized representative.

Only those invoices that are complete and in line with existing instructions - and which constitute an instrument which can be used as evidence in court, are acceptable to the company.... all others are subject to the return to the dealer who made the delivery.

Yours very truly,

Gentlemen:

Attached is a reproduction of a letter to dealers, which is scheduled to be published in the November, 1954 issue of THE TEXACO DEALER, and should be received by all dealers on the mailing list on or shortly after November 15, 1954.

The intent of this message should be immediately apparent to all who READ IT. Our credit card volume, already huge, is continuing to grow rapidly and represents a tremendous business within itself. In the light of this fact and considering the plus benefits derived by our dealers from participation in the Texaco Credit Card program, we are entirely justified in insisting that the dealers play fair with us; that they do not cut corners in the handling of invoices and other forms covering credit card sales; and that they cooperate by observing the few simple principles and rules outlined in the attached letter.

Although the number of instances of proven or suspected deviations is small percentagewise when compared with the number of transactions per year, they occur much too frequently and, what is worse, seem to be increasing. Too many transactions have had to be charged back to dealers' accounts with resultant hard feelings between the dealer and the Company, or our local representative.

I am sure you will agree that we should NOT condone ANY practices that threaten the value of the TEXACO CREDIT CARD as a promotional item and any efforts expended to check such practices will be WORTH WHILE. With these thoughts in mind, it is requested that you campaign actively for a period of at least 30 DAYS to the end that EACH and EVERY TEXACO DEALER is called upon and the significance of the message in "THE TEXACO DEALER" is explained to him.

At the same time it would be well for you to review and refreshen the dealers' knowledge of the material in the placard "INFORMATION FOR TEXACO DEALERS AND SERVICE STATION ATTENDANTS", a copy of which should be on display or otherwise readily accessible at each resale outlet. A few simple rules that should be given special attention are the following:

1. Be sure the credit card presented to him is of current issue.

2. Check the cancellation list to determine whether the account number and name are shown thereon.

3. Be sure that the credit card letter prefix and account number are transcribed correctly to the Form 3-1990. Erroneous numbers appear all too frequently and may be the cause of delayed or incorrect billing, thereby aggravating the customer.

4. All Form 3-1990 invoices should be turned over to the truck operator at the time of each delivery. They should not under any circumstances be allowed to accumulate for long periods of time, in fact, if deliveries are made only infrequently, it is important that arrangements be made for more frequent pick-up of credit card invoices.

It is hoped that by means of this concentrated effort to educate or re-educate our dealers and their assistants, there will be a tremendous improvement in the overall handling of credit card transactions and a sharp reduction in the number of apparently irregular sales.

subject: misuse of credit cards

AN OPEN LETTER TO TEXACO DEALERS

In fairness to you it is thought well to express a word of caution about improper practices engaged in by a few persons who hold Texaco Credit Cards.

It is bound to happen, of course, that with more than a million Credit Cards outstanding, some will come into the hands of unscrupulous persons who deliberately misuse the credit privilege. Although the number of such instances is very small, there have been some cases where individual Dealers have been victimized for relatively large amounts.

We do not have in mind the person who uses the Credit Card for purchases of petroleum products or services, or TBA items that are mounted on or attached to the vehicle, because, as you well know, the credit risk thereby entailed is assumed entirely by The Texas Company. The person to whom we refer is the one who persuades or endeavors to persuade a Dealer to make UNAUTHORIZED sales or transactions of a nature such as the following:

examples of transactions that are not authorized

1. Delivery of tires, tubes, batteries, etc. that are not mounted on or attached to the vehicle.

   (There is reason to believe that in some cases the "purchaser" has driven away with the merchandise and sold it to another Dealer to obtain cash.)

2. The use of credit card invoices to cover UNAUTHORIZED general repairs or maintenance work.

3. The exchange of cash for a signed credit card invoice, or the inflation of the amount of such an invoice to cover cash advanced plus products purchased.

Should any person carrying a Texaco credit card approach you with the request that you make an unauthorized sale, or propose any other kind of transaction that would represent misuse of the credit privilege, it is suggested that you do not comply and that you inform someone at your supplying bulk station of the name, address and account number shown on the credit card. You will, in such cases, be rendering a valuable service to your fellow Texaco Dealers as well as to yourself and the Company.

It is not by any means our intent to restrict the normal credit privileges to which Credit Card holders are entitled, nor to discourage the use of those privileges. Our concern is only with those who seek to abuse the privileges and, unfortunately, have been successful in a few instances at the expense of Dealers who knowingly permitted unauthorized transactions.

Gentlemen:

Attached is a copy of a letter to dealers which is scheduled to be published in the November, 1954 issue of "The Texaco Dealer", and should be received by all dealers on the mailing list on or shortly after November 15, 1954.

The intent of this message should be immediately apparent to all who read it. Our credit card volume, already huge, is continuing to grow rapidly and represents a tremendous business within itself. At this time there are credit cards in the possession of more than one million of our customers, and sales are being made at a rate approaching per year. The direct cost to the Company of this business is estimated, quite conservatively, at a minimum of per year. In the light of those facts, and considering the plus benefits derived by our dealers from participation in the Texaco credit card program, we are entirely justified in insisting that the dealers play fair with us; that they do not cut corners in the handling of invoices and other forms covering credit card sales; and that they cooperate by observing the few simple principles and rules outlined in the attached letter.

Although the number of instances of proven or suspected deviations is small percentagewise, when compared with the approximately 50,000,000 transactions per year, they occur much too frequently, and, what is worse, seem to be increasing. Entirely too many transactions have had to be charged back to dealers' accounts with resultant hard feelings between the dealer and the Company, or our local representative. Innumerable other items have had to be absorbed at the expense of the Company because of lack of sufficient proof of dealers' negligence or culpability.

I am sure you will agree that we should not condone any practices that threaten the value of the Texaco credit card as a promotional item, and any efforts expended to check such practices will be worth while.

With those thoughts in mind, it is requested that you campaign actively for a period of at least thirty days to the end that each and every dealer is called upon and the significance of the message in "The Texaco Dealer" explained to him. Among other things, it should be pointed out to each dealer that, in self-interest, if for no other reason, his active and intelligent cooperation should be given for the proper handling of sales of products and authorized merchandise and services that are made to credit card holders. At the same time it would be well for you to review and refreshen the dealers' knowledge of the material in the placard "INFORMATION FOR TEXACO DEALERS AND SERVICE STATION ATTENDANTS", a copy of which should be on display or otherwise

It is hoped that by means of such a concentrated effort to educate or re-educate our dealers and their assistants, there will be a considerable improvement in the over-all handling of credit card transactions and a sharp reduction in the number of apparently irregular deals. Additional benefits will accrue from reinstilling a knowledge of credit card practices and procedures and a better appreciation of the credit card program in the minds of our own people.

It follows, of course, that the educational work should be continued indefinitely, beyond the expiration of the suggested campaign period, and that your efforts should not be relaxed to obtain the wholehearted cooperation of dealers in the correct handling of this huge volume of credit card business. Henceforth this shall be a primary and continuing responsibility of the Merchandising and General Salesmen.

As there is an equal need for this program throughout Consignee and Distributor areas, they are being asked (by copy of this letter) to cooperate to the same extent as our salaried organization.

Gentlemen:

Effective January 1, 1955, dealers handling Texaco gasolines are authorized to honor unexpired and uncancelled Texaco National Credit Cards for purchases of new Firestone and B. F. Goodrich tires, tubes, batteries and accessories on a deferred payment basis, providing the merchandise purchased is mounted on or attached to a motor vehicle operated by the authorized holder of the credit card.

Under this plan, TBA purchases of $30.00 (net after trade-in or other allowances) or more may be paid in equal monthly installments over a 3-month period. Net purchases of $50.00 or more may be paid in equal monthly installments over a period of 6 months.

In the Pacific Coast Territory there will be a service charge of $1.00 for purchases made on 3-month terms, and a charge of $1.50 for 6-month terms. In order to meet major competition there will be no service charge imposed on purchases made in the Southern, Central, and Northern Territories.

While it is not practical to change the wording appearing on our credit card until the next printing, it is a part of this program that only purchases of Firestone and B. F. Goodrich merchandise are authorized since it will be understood that the Company does not wish to underwrite TBA sales on credit terms where it does not receive a commission.

Enclosed is specimen of a letter to be mailed by Division Managers to Texaco Dealers handling Firestone or B. F. Goodrich TBA merchandise. Each Division should arrange for printing their requirements of this letter, using outside letterhead and showing facsimile signature of Division Manager. The letters should be mailed in sufficient time to reach dealers prior to January 1, 1955.

Also enclosed is text of a message to holders of Texaco National Credit Cards, a supply of which is being printed and shipped to each Division. These will be placed in envelopes with statements mailed to active credit card accounts during the monthly billing cycle beginning January 1, 1955.

The Department Agent's office has arranged for printing a special invoice form for use by dealers making TBA sales on a deferred payment basis, also a placard giving information to dealers regarding procedures for handling invoices, etc., covering such sales. These forms are scheduled for shipment to reach Division Offices on or before December 20, 1954.

Accounting and credit instructions covering handling of TBA sales on the deferred payment basis are being issued by the Department Agent.

As you well know, the need and advisability of this program has been under consideration for quite some time, and now that it is being authorized, we would like to see it made as productive as possible. In adopting this program, The Texas Company is going to considerable expense and trouble, but we feel that it affords a wonderful opportunity for increasing our TBA sales very materially. I trust that you and your organization will leave nothing undone to make this program highly successful.

Message to be sent by Divisions in Northern, Central, and Southern Territories to Credit Card Customers announcing TEXACO DEFERRED PAYMENT PLAN

To Holders of Texaco National Credit Cards:

Your Texaco National Credit Card will hereafter provide an additional useful service. From now on, you can, when desired, take advantage of our new TEXACO DEFERRED PAYMENT PLAN for your purchases of new Firestone or B. F. Goodrich Tires, Tubes, Batteries and Automotive Accessories when purchased from and installed on your motor vehicle by your Texaco Dealer.

If you wish to purchase new Firestone or B. F. Goodrich merchandise for your car or truck through your Texaco credit card, in amounts of $30.00 (net after trade-in or other allowances) or more, payments may be arranged in equal monthly installments over a 3-month period. If your net purchase is $50.00 or more, payments may be made in equal monthly installments over a period of 6 months. There is no down payment - no service charge!

Deferred payment terms do not apply to your purchases of Texaco petroleum products or services.

We believe you will find this new Texaco Deferred Payment Plan a great convenience in fulfilling your needs for top quality Firestone or B. F. Goodrich automotive necessities usually handled by most Texaco Dealers. In addition to your monthly charges for Texaco gasolines, motor oils, and Marfak Lubrication Service, you are simply billed for the current amount due on purchases made under the Deferred Payment Plan - 1/3 or 1/6 of the total amount purchased - on your regular monthly statement.

So the next time you are talking over the needs of your car or truck with your neighborhood Texaco Dealer, remember you can now buy a complete set of new tires - in fact, anything that can be installed on your car by your Texaco Dealer - on easy terms with no down payment and no service charge through your Texaco National Credit Card. This new Texaco Deferred Payment Plan is at your disposal; do not hesitate to use it.

Draft of Announcement to Texaco Dealers now handling Firestone & B. F. Goodrich in Northern, Central, and Southern Territories

Dear Texaco Dealer:

Here is something you have been asking for !

On January 1, 1953, the new Texaco Deferred Payment Plan for holders of Texaco National Credit Cards will become effective. In addition to our customary 30-day terms, our new Plan will authorize Texaco Dealers to honor unexpired and uncanceled Texaco National Credit Cards for purchases of new Firestone or B. F. Goodrich tires, tubes, batteries and accessories on a maximum deferred payment basis up to 6 months. As has always been the case, such sales of TBA merchandise are authorized for Texaco Credit Card accounts providing at time of sale the TBA items sold are mounted on or attached to the vehicle operated by the customer to whom the Credit Card is issued.

The new Texaco Deferred Payment Plan makes it possible for you to sell new Firestone or B. F. Goodrich TBA items totaling $30 or more (net after trade-in or other allowances) with payments to be made in equal monthly installments over a 3-month period. Net sales of $50 or more may be paid in equal monthly installments over a period of 6 months. There is no down payment and no service charge.

We believe our new Texaco Deferred Payment Plan will be of great assistance to you in increasing your sales of all products and services at your station. It should make it easy for you to boost your sales of Firestone or B. F. Goodrich tires in sets of 2 or 4; it will enable you to add on at the same time the sale of a battery plus the other replacement necessities that will assure your customer safer, more economical, and carefree driving. What is more, now since you may take care of your customer's TBA needs on terms that are most convenient to him, it isn't likely that you will have to unnecessarily lessen your profits in order to make the sale. Remember, when a motorist desires extended terms on his TBA purchases, he is less likely to shop around and certainly less likely to quibble about price. Best of all - your sales of B. F. Goodrich or Firestone TBA to credit card accounts is actually a cash sale for you - whether the terms be 30 days, 3 months, or 6 months for your customer.

A book of special invoices, Forms S-450, together with detailed information covering proper preparation and handling will be delivered to you in a few days. It is extremely important that these invoices be prepared carefully so that your customers will be billed on the exact basis on which sales are made.

Many Texaco Dealers have expressed to us the need for a program like this to assist them in their sales of Tires, Batteries, and Accessories. We hope that this plan, which will be nationwide, will be of valuable assistance to you, so talk up the new Texaco Deferred Payment Plan - that can be tailored to your Credit Card customer's desire. Build up your sales and profits on all products and services.

Sincerely yours,

Division Manager

TEXACO DEFERRED PAYMENT PLAN
T.B.A. MERCHANDISE

TO ALL TEXACO DEALERS

(2 - 44.1)

Gentlemen:

The reverse side of our credit card reads in part as follows:

"This card will be honored for the following merchandise and services:

1. Texaco Petroleum Products, Marfak Lubrication Service, Washing and Polishing Service for Passenger cars and Trucks.

2. New Firestone or B. F. Goodrich Passenger car and Truck tires, tubes, batteries, and accessories, plus installation charges, if any, providing the merchandise is mounted on or attached to motor vehicle operated by holder of card."

In connection with purchases of Firestone or Goodrich merchandise referred to above, we wish to call your attention to the Texaco DEFERRED Payment Plan, which provides:

1. Payments covering net purchases (after trade-in or other allowances) of $30.00 or more may be made in equal monthly installments over a 3 month period. A service charge of $1.00 applies to such a purchase.

2. Payments covering net purchases of $50.00 or more may be made in equal monthly installments over a 6 month period. A service charge of $1.50 applies to such purchases.

The above Plan should greatly assist dealers handling Firestone or Goodrich products, to sell large quantities of T.B.A. merchandise. The handling charges are the lowest we know of.

Despite this, however, sales in October were as follows:

	PER CENT OF DEFERRED PAYMENT SALES TO TOTAL T.B.A. SALES
Butte Division	7.2%
Los Angeles Division	26.6%
Seattle Division	13.9%

We urge you and your employees who may participate in a Bonus Plan, to take full advantage of the Texaco Deferred Payment Plan.

Yours very truly,

IHC:KK

RESPONSE OF CONTINENTAL OIL COMPANY
TO
ITEM 2(b) OF SPECIFICATION 1 OF SUBPOENA

The Headquarters Office of the Marketing Department has never maintained records which would permit a breakdown of the number of Conoco accounts by outlet classification purchasing Goodrich TBA. The credit memos received monthly from Goodrich containing a breakdown of the sales and commissions are by rate of commission only and do not separate or distinguish between outlets subject to the same rate of commission (i.e., "L" and "D" accounts are grouped together because the rate of commission is 10 per cent as to both types of outlet). Any records which would permit a breakdown as requested under this item are maintained by our various marketing division offices. A survey of these offices indicated that only fragmentary records are available for the years 1952 and 1953. By agreement of counsel, the records of the marketing divisions, insofar as they are available, were used to obtain information for the years 1954 and 1955 only. The information in question was obtained from postings which had been done currently at the time of receipt of the forms 381 every month from Goodrich. The actual forms 381 for the years 1954 and 1955 have been deleted in almost every instance by the marketing divisions, pursuant to our routine file deletion programs; however, even if the forms 381 were still a part of our records, the assembling of the requested information from these forms would be an almost insurmountable task.

Subject to the above comments, the number of accounts by outlet classification purchasing $1.00 or more TBA during the last quarter of 1954 and 1955, respectively, upon whose purchases commissions were paid by Goodrich are hereinafter set out insofar as our available records permit:

ADDENDUM TO RESPONSE OF CONTINENTAL OIL COMPANY
TO
ITEM 1(a) OF SPECIFICATION II OF SUBPOENA

(a) Exhibit A is always used by Continental in leasing service station properties which it owns or holds under firm long-term lease and which bears a company designated number. Exhibit A-1 is normally used in leasing service stations which Continental holds under a short-term lease. In many instances the owner of the service station property is the lessee under Exhibit A-1.

(b) The majority of leases on Exhibit A are for one year, although a number of such leases are for periods up to three years. The average term of the leases on Exhibit A-1 are from two to five years, and in many instances the term coincides with the term of the lease under which Continental holds the property.

(c) It is impossible to make a categorical statement as to the rental basis under Exhibits A and A-1, since the rental under such leases is a matter of negotiation between the appropriate Continental field office and the respective lessee. The rental payable under Exhibit A-1 is sometimes a flat cash rental and sometimes a gallonage rental. Although the rental clause of Exhibit A is worded so as to permit a flat cash rental together with a gallonage rental, many of our leases on Exhibit A are on gallonage rental only.

(d) Generally, in the lease of a service station property, certain equipment is included and listed, such as underground tanks, pumps and oil dispensing equipment and many times other equipment such as hoists and air compressors are included, together with other miscellaneous dispensing equipment used in connection with the operation of a service station.

(If firm or corporation, so state; if partners, give full name and residence of each partner.)

of _____, State of _____, hereinafter called Lessee (whether one or more):

WITNESSETH: Grantor, in consideration of the covenants and agreements of Lessee herein, hereby leases to Lessee the following real and personal property (hereinafter called the "premises"), to be used only for the purpose herein stated, situated at _____, in the County of _____, State of _____, to-wit:

That part of the following described ground occupied by the service station building or buildings hereinafter described, and so much thereof (if less than the whole) as Grantor determines is necessary for the operation of said service station and that part of said ground reasonably necessary for the proper operation of a service station, including but not limited to the

3. Not to commit or suffer waste to be committed upon the said premises and to make no alterations in or additions to the premises without the written consent of Conoco first had and obtained, except that Lessee may and agrees to make such alterations in or on the leased equipment as may from time to time be necessary to identify the products being dispensed from such equipment.

4. Lessee shall in case of fire or other damage to premises give immediate notice thereof to Conoco. If the premises shall be partially damaged by fire or other cause without negligence chargeable to Lessee same shall be repaired at Conoco's option and expense as speedily as practicable. During the period needed for such repairs the rent hereunder shall not cease if station can be operated. If certain improvements and/or equipment are totally destroyed by fire, act of God, or other cause, or so damaged thereby that Conoco deems it necessary to rebuild the same, Conoco may terminate this lease by written notice or at its option may rebuild or replace said improvements and/or equipment and the rent in such case shall cease only during the period required for such rebuilding or replacements. If such destruction or damage has referred to above be caused by the negligence or improper conduct of Lessee, or any agent or servant of Lessee, it shall be optional with Conoco whether the last preceding sentence shall apply or Lessee shall be liable to Conoco for the full amount of rent herein reserved, and, in either case, Lessee shall be liable for all loss to Conoco.

5. Conoco, its agents and employees, shall not be liable for any loss, damage, injuries, or other casualty of whatsoever kind or by whomsoever caused, to the person or property of anyone (including the Lessee) on or off the premises, arising out of or resulting from the Lessee's use, possession, or operation thereof, or from the installation, existence, use, maintenance, condition, repair, alteration, or removal of any equipment thereon, whether due in whole or in part to negligent acts or omissions of Conoco, its agents or employees; and the Lessee, for himself, his heirs, executors, administrators, successors, and assigns, hereby agrees to indemnify and hold Conoco, its agents and employees harmless from and against all claims for such loss, damage, injury, or other casualty.

6. To comply at Lessee's expense with all federal, state, municipal and other governmental and local laws, rules, regulations, and ordinances relating to said premises and/or relating to or arising out of the operation of said service station thereon, and not to use said premises in any way in violation of the laws of the United States, or state laws, or local ordinances or regulations, or any insurance policies thereon. Lessee shall comply with the following provisions, which it is agreed are necessary or safety measures in connection with the operation of said premises:

(a) Not to smoke on said premises or permit smoking on said premises.

(b) Not to permit any intoxicated person to remain on said premises. No intoxicants shall be used thereon by Lessee or kept or allowed to remain, or be used thereon, and no intoxicated person shall operate or take part in the operation of said station.

(c) Not to permit the accumulation of oil, grease, or gasoline on the floor of any building covered thereby, or the accumulation of oil, grease, gasoline, ice or snow on any driveway covered thereby.

(d) Not to store, keep, or sell gasoline on said premises in or through any glass containers other than a pump, or store, keep, or sell gasoline on said premises in any container not properly labeled.

(e) Not to use gasoline for cleaning purposes on said premises.

(f) To provide covered metal containers for disposal of waste, empty one- and five-quart oil and grease cans, and for oily rags, and to use said containers to help keep down fire hazard.

(g) If any tool or equipment covered by this lease shall become defective, Lessee shall not use or permit the use thereof.

7. To keep said premises and that portion of the streets, alleys, sidewalks and driveways immediately adjacent thereto neat and clean, and said premises in an orderly and attractive condition. Conoco may inspect premises at any reasonable time.

8. Lessee has received said premises in good order and condition and will keep the same in good order and condition and at the expiration or other termination of this lease will yield up the same to Conoco in as good order and condition as when same were entered upon by said Lessee, fire by fire, act of God, or ordinary wear excepted, and will promptly make all necessary minor repairs and replacements such as replacement of gaskets, air, and water hose, window lights, electric light globes, and items of similar nature. If Lessee fails to comply with any agreement of Lessee as to keeping the premises in good condition, Conoco may put the same in condition as provided for and Lessee shall reimburse Conoco for the expense incurred by it in doing so.

9. If said premises or any part thereof shall be condemned or taken for any public purpose, Conoco may forthwith terminate this lease by written notice to Lessee.

10. If Conoco shall make any payment by reason of the failure of Lessee to keep any agreement herein, all amounts so paid, together with all interest, costs or damages, shall at Conoco's option become a part of the rent becoming due on the rent payment day next succeeding such payments respectively.

11. Conoco and Lessee recognize the determination in value of premises permitted to remain idle and agree if the premises hereby leased shall not be used for any period of thirty consecutive days for the purposes for which the same are leased, this lease shall terminate at the expiration of such thirty-day period.

12. The agreements of Lessee herein shall be deemed conditions and if default shall be made in any of them, or if the premises shall become vacant, Conoco at its election may declare this lease ended and re-enter the premises, or any part thereof, with or without process of law and expel, remove and put out Lessee, or any other person or persons occupying, in or upon the same, using such force as necessary, and Lessee agrees to surrender said premises peaceably to Conoco immediately upon the expiration or termination of this lease, however terminated, and that upon the non-payment of the whole or any portion of said rent at the time the same is promised to be paid, or upon the violation or non-fulfillment of any of the covenants of this lease, Conoco may at its option either distrain for said rent due and damages sustained or declare this lease at an end and forever prevention as if said premises were held by forcible detainer, said Lessee hereby waiving any notice of such election and any demand for the prosecution of said premises and any legal rights Lessee may have under the exemption laws of the state in which said premises are located, or in such case Conoco at its option may, without terminating this lease, rent said premises for such rent and upon such conditions as it may think best, making such changes and repairs as may be required, giving credit for the rent so received during such term, less all expense of such changes and repairs and the expense of any proceedings which may have been necessary in order to regain possession of said premises, and the cost of re-letting the same and Lessee shall be liable for the balance of the rent herein reserved and upon the other obligations assumed herein until the expiration of the term hereof; provided Conoco at its option, after re-letting said premises under this paragraph, may, nevertheless, terminate this lease at the end of any such period of re-letting, and if Conoco shall take possession under this paragraph, Lessee may not re-enter without Conoco's consent. Any remedy to Conoco specified herein shall be in addition to any remedy which it would otherwise have.

13. If Lessee, after the expiration or termination hereof, shall remain in possession of said premises with Conoco's consent, and continue to pay rent, without written agreement as to such possession, then Lessee shall be regarded as a tenant from month to month at a monthly rental, the amount of which for each month, shall be the rental above specified for that respective month, and which shall be payable monthly in advance on hereinabove provided subject to the covenants and conditions herein.

14. Conoco shall furnish so far as the same shall be reasonably available, free of cost to Lessee, rest room supplies for use at said station, of such kinds as Conoco shall select; but if Lessee fails to keep a proper amount of said supplies in rest room or rooms, Conoco shall no longer be obliged to furnish the same. Lessee shall pay all license, occupation, excise and other fees, taxes and assessments on the business conducted on said premises or sales made therefrom.

15. In case said real estate or any of the other property leased hereby is held by Conoco under a lease under which lessor in said lease retains the right to cancel and terminate said lease upon giving certain notice to Conoco, or in case of certain contingency, and said lease so held by Conoco is so cancelled or terminated by such lessor without default by Conoco, this lease shall also thereupon terminate, and Lessee agrees to comply with the terms and conditions of any such lease as held by Conoco except the payment of rentals thereunder.

16. If Lessee during the existence of this lease shall purchase automotive lubrication oils and/or greases from Conoco at the same prices extended by Conoco to retail dealers generally at the place where said premises are located at the respective times of purchase by Lessee, in any quantity upon which quantity discount would be allowed by Conoco if purchased by any such retail dealer at the place where said premises are located, under written contract made on the date hereof, Conoco shall allow the same quantity discount to Lessee.

17. It is mutually agreed that none of the provisions of this lease shall be considered as reserving to Conoco any right to exercise any control over the business or operations of Lessee conducted upon the leased premises or to direct in any manner the management thereof, the hours and conditions that be observed by Lessee in the operation of the same, or the prices to be charged by Lessee for any merchandise handled by Conoco. Any such party or parties shall be hired by Lessee at Lessee's expense, and shall be paid and discharged by Lessee.

18. This lease constitutes the entire agreement as to the subjects covered hereby. No verbal agreement exists connecting the same. Any and all previous agreements as to said premises are hereby cancelled. Conoco is hereby authorized to place upon said premises or any part thereof any signs Conoco may desire, and Lessee hereby agrees that the same may remain thereon. Buyer agrees to comply with the health rules and regulations now in existence and which may be hereafter issued from time to time by the office of the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service and any governmental agency having jurisdiction in the premises with respect to the handling, distribution, and sale of gasoline containing tetraethyl lead and to require such subsequent purchaser for resale from Buyer to assume a similar obligation.

7. THE CONOCO TRADE-MARK: Subject to other provisions hereof and unless Conoco consents otherwise in writing, the products purchased hereunder will be sold to the public under the respective applicable brand names of Conoco; and Buyer shall display the same on all containers in which such products are handled and in all advertisements thereof and at all stations and other places of distribution from which sales or deliveries may be made by Buyer. Buyer will properly display and make proper use of all advertising matter furnished by Conoco to help stimulate Buyer's sales of products covered hereby.

Conoco shall have the right at any time during the life of this contract to change, alter or amend any of the trade names or brands under which products covered by this contract are now or may hereafter be sold. If Conoco shall at any time during the term of this contract discontinue the marketing of any or all of the brands of products covered by the contract, Conoco shall be relieved of all obligations to sell or deliver such discontinued brands to Buyer; and if Conoco shall market any other brand or brands of products in lieu of the discontinued brand or brands, this contract shall embrace such new brand or brands of products.

ADDITIONAL STIPULATIONS:

If the application of any provision hereof relating to increase of price would result in a total price for any product covered hereby in excess of such price or maximum price as has been or may be fixed thereon by valid regulation of any governmental agency, the price of such product shipped while such regulation is in effect shall not exceed the price fixed thereby.

Shipments hereunder shall be made in approximately equal monthly quantities upon order from Buyer. It is agreed that no shipments will be made in tank cars unless Buyer has provided sufficient available tank storage and facilities to unload from tank car direct into such storage.

If Buyer at any time shall resell in unlawful quantities any of the products contracted to be sold hereunder, or if any car shipped under this contract shall be diverted by Buyer from the destination as shown on the original bill of lading without first obtaining Conoco's written consent, or in case Buyer shall violate any of the provisions hereof, Conoco shall have the right and option to cancel and terminate this contract.

This contract shall be construed as a divisible contract as to each and every monthly installment, shipments during each month to be apportioned approximately thereto, and a failure to order, take out and accept the quantity of products called for in any such installment period, except as may be prevented by the variation of capacity of available tank cars, shall constitute a material breach of this contract and said contract may be canceled at the option of Conoco by giving written notice to Buyer without any obligation on Conoco to tender the balance of such installment not theretofore ordered. Failure of Buyer to order, take out and accept in any month the quantity of products to be delivered hereunder shall in no event entitle Buyer to order and take out in any subsequent month the quantity Buyer shall have so previously failed to take out.

Claims for errors, deficiencies, or imperfections will not be entertained by Conoco unless prompt notice is given by Buyer and instructions received previous to acceptance of goods.

If any tax or other charge collectible from Conoco is now or hereafter imposed by any federal government authority, state, or municipal authority upon any of the goods herein described, or the production, manufacture, storage, or withdrawal from storage, sale, transportation, delivery, or use thereof, the price to be paid by Buyer may, unless such tax or charge is included in the price payable by Buyer, as herein elsewhere provided, be increased to the extent of such tax or charge, unless such tax or charge is collectible by Conoco from Buyer as a tax, in which case Buyer shall reimburse Conoco for same as a tax.

Neither Conoco nor Buyer shall be liable for any losses resulting if performance of any provision hereof is delayed or prevented by war or national emergency, now or hereafter existing, or by reason of compliance with any order of, contract with, or request of the United States or any agency thereof, or of any state or political subdivision thereof, or inability with reasonable diligence to obtain in the area in which deliveries are to be made hereunder, equipment, materials, or supplies, or action of an enemy, revolution or other disorder, embargo, import or export restriction, strike, lockout, fire, flood, windstorm, accident or act of God, disruption or breakdown of transportation, failure of or interference with supply from Conoco's present source or sources, perils of the sea, accidents of navigation, breakdown of or injury to any ship, loss of tanker tonnage or reduction thereof by reason of compliance with any order or request of any governmental authority, or if performance is delayed or prevented by any cause not within the control of the party in default, or which with reasonable diligence such party is unable to prevent, whether of any class of causes hereinbefore enumerated or not.

In any such case the operation of this contract so far as necessary shall be suspended. The cause of interruption shall be remedied, if reasonably possible, with all dispatch, and performance resumed at the earliest practicable time after cessation of such interruption. Conoco shall not be required to make up deliveries omitted on account of any such cause or causes.

If by reason of any of said causes Conoco shall be unable to supply the requirements of all of its customers of any product covered hereby in the area in which deliveries are to be made hereunder, Conoco's obligation while such inability exists shall at its option be reduced to the extent necessary in its judgment to apportion fairly among its customers the amount which it is able to supply.

ITEM 2(a) OF SPECIFICATION II OF SUBPOENA

(1) During 1951, the credit card issued by Conoco was the so-called "President's Courtesy Card" in the form annexed hereto as EXHIBIT H. Prior to 1951, and possibly during a portion of that year, Conoco also issued a "regular" credit card and the "Touraide" credit card (issued to users of Conoco "Touraide" Road Map Service). The "regular" and "Touraider" credit cards were discontinued and no copies of these cards are available, but they differed from the "President's Courtesy Card" only in name, color and period of validity.

(2) On or about April 1, 1952, Conoco revised its "President's Courtesy Card" to the form which is annexed hereto as EXHIBIT I.

In March, 1953, Conoco installed its credit check system, which was supplementary to the "President's Courtesy Card". The "check" is, in reality, an invoice and is punched so that it can be run through IBM bookkeeping equipment. Credit checks come in pads which are clipped in leatherette or paper containers. The top sheet of the pad constitutes, in effect, a credit card. The top sheet of the credit checkbook is annexed hereto as EXHIBIT J, and a credit "check" is annexed hereto as EXHIBIT J-1. Since the introduction of the credit checkbook system, a minor change in color and arrangement of the credit checkbook has been made, but no substantive change has been made in the conditions of the top sheet or credit checks.

(3) The "President's Courtesy Card" as revised on April 1, 1952 (Exhibit I) and the top sheet of the credit checkbook (Exhibit J) are now, and have been since their effective dates, the forms of credit identification used by Conoco.

TO
ITEM 2(a) OF SPECIFICATION II OF SUBPOENA

Since the preparation of the original response to the Subpoena, Continental Oil Company issued a new credit card in the latter part of October, 1957. This credit card is attached hereto and is the authorized credit card of the company effective November 1, 1957. This card is the "charge-a-plate" type and represents a departure from our credit check book system. The only material change in the conditions of the card is the inclusion of Firestone tires, batteries and accessories to the list of items for which Continental will accept credit invoices.

RESPONSE OF CONTINENTAL OIL COMPANY
TO
ITEM 2(b) OF SPECIFICATION II OF SUBPOENA

Conoco has never issued "instructions" to Conoco outlets relative to the use of credit cards or credit checks. Conoco has, at various times, "requested" or "recommended" that retail dealers of its branded products honor the identification cards specified and extend retail credit to the holders thereof (see the aforementioned Exhibits H, I and J). No dealer is compelled to honor such cards (or credit checkbooks) if he does not wish to do so. If the dealer does elect to honor the Conoco credit identification cards (or the credit identification cards of those companies with which Conoco has reciprocal exchange agreements), he may assign to Conoco, without recourse, all invoices representing sales made in compliance with the conditions printed on the cards. Conoco accepts such invoices at their face amount, which amount is thereupon either credited to the dealer's account with Conoco or else paid to the dealer in cash.

Prior to April, 1952, dealers handling Conoco branded gasoline had been furnished a so-called "Mileage Merchants' Guide" in the form annexed hereto as EXHIBIT K, which furnished them certain information as to the handling of credit card sales. In April, 1952, at the time of the revision of the "President's Courtesy Card", a so-called "gummed sticker" was furnished to each dealer for attachment to the Mileage Merchants' Guide. This gummed sticker advised the dealers that Conoco would accept invoices for Goodrich tires, tubes, batteries and accessories under certain specified conditions. A copy of this gummed sticker is annexed hereto to Exhibit K and is identified as EXHIBIT K-1.

On August 1, 1952, competitive considerations caused Conoco to liberalize its retail credit policy by offering 30-, 60- and 90-day extended payment terms on credit card sales of tires, tubes and batteries. This change was announced to all "Conoco Mileage Merchants" (i.e., retailers of Conoco branded gasoline) by mailing or delivering to all of said dealers a detailed notice of Conoco's new policy as to extended terms. A copy of this notice is annexed hereto as EXHIBIT L.

In 1953, when Conoco installed its credit check system, the so-called "Mileage Merchants' Guide" was revised and a copy of the revised Guide furnished to all branded gasoline dealers. A copy of this revised "Mileage Merchants' Guide" is annexed hereto as EXHIBIT M. At approximately the same time, a booklet dealing only with the new credit checkbook system was furnished to each branded gasoline dealer, and a copy of this booklet is annexed hereto as EXHIBIT N.

On March 15, 1955, competitive considerations also caused Conoco to further liberalize its retail credit policy by offering three-month and six-month extended payment terms on credit card sales of tires, tubes, batteries, and certain accessories. This change was announced to branded gasoline dealers by furnishing them a detailed notice of such new extended payment terms. A copy of this notice is annexed hereto as EXHIBIT O.

In the latter part of 1955, another revision of the "Conoco Dealers Guide" was made and a copy of the revised Guide was furnished to all branded gasoline dealers. A copy of this revised "Conoco Dealers Guide" is annexed hereto as EXHIBIT P.

On July 24, 1956, Conoco's Marketing field offices were advised by Mr. E. B. Peterson, General Credit Manager, that they were authorized to accept assignment of invoices from lessees and dealers covering sales of Firestone tires, tubes, batteries and certain accessories to holders of valid credit identification. A copy of this letter is annexed hereto as EXHIBIT Q. Unlike previous procedure, there was no uniform printed form of notice to Conoco branded gasoline dealers furnished to the field offices by the General Credit Manager for distribution by those offices to the dealers. As a result thereof, there was no uniformity in the time or in the manner of notification by Conoco's various field offices to Conoco branded gasoline dealers that they were authorized to make sales of Firestone TBA on valid credit identification cards. In many instances, this notice was verbally communicated to Conoco's lessees and direct contract dealers by Conoco's commission agents and field personnel, and Conoco's jobbers were notified in writing. These jobbers, in turn, verbally notified their dealers who sold Conoco branded gasoline. Illustrative of this procedure are copies of two notification letters issued by the Credit Manager of the Chicago Division, which are annexed hereto as EXHIBITS Q-1 and Q-2.

Continental Tire

Ponca City, Oklahoma
January 31, 1952

TO: All Division Managers

SUBJECT: THE MARKETING OF TIRES, BATTERIES, AND ACCESSORIES THROUGH CONTINENTAL'S SALES OUTLETS

After five months of investigating the activities and preferences of our dealers in the selling of T.B.A. merchandise and exploring the relative merits of what the different suppliers had to offer, it has been decided that Continental will enter the marketing of T.B.A. merchandise on a commission-override basis with The B. F. Goodrich Company as their supplier.

There are several good reasons for adopting the commission-override basis instead of selling Conoco branded items:

1. It will give us an opportunity to have our field selling force, now inexperienced in the marketing of T.B.A. items, educated by a supplier well qualified to perform that function.

2. It will avoid the necessity of setting up warehousing and distribution facilities and, of course, detailed accounting procedures.

3. We would have no investment in stocks of tires, batteries, or accessories.

The reasons for selecting The B. F. Goodrich Company as our supplier are largely as follows:

1. They are one of the oldest and best established companies in the rubber industry, and their operations are international in scope.

2. Their products are second to none in the industry in quality and workmanship.

3. They have had a wealth of experience in working with petroleum companies.

4. If some time in the future we should decide it would be to our advantage to market our own Conoco brand tire, we could have Goodrich manufacture it for us without having to change suppliers.

Our T.B.A. Headquarters staff and field organization will be set up as quickly as possible and, when that is accomplished, the entire T.B.A. sales program will be brought to you through a series of field meetings. However, you should inform all your field representatives of this decision as soon as possible so that when new lessees are selected or new dealers secured, every possible effort may be made to start them off on the Goodrich line of tires, batteries, and accessories.

As the selection of The B. F. Goodrich Company as a supplier was the recommendation of the Marketing Department staff, including all regional managers, and as the top management of the company approved this recommendation, we are looking forward to an enthusiastic, hard-hitting, and profitable sales program for the Continental Oil Company.

SUBJECT: T.B.A. PROGRAM PLANS

As you know, the Continental Oil Company made an agreement with The B. F. Goodrich Company as of February 1st for the selling of Goodrich tires, batteries, and accessories through Continental Oil Company's outlets on a commission basis. Since that time, a lot has been accomplished toward the launching of the program. We feel it would be helpful for you to know its present status and our plans for carrying it through.

(1) Approval has been given to the organization setup consisting of a T.B.A. Manager, two assistants, two clerks, and a secretary for the Ponca City headquarters staff and one T.B.A. man for each of the ten divisions with the status of an ADM.

Mr. J. J. Nemeth who has been the Oklahoma City Division Manager has been appointed as the manager of T.B.A. Sales, headquartering in Ponca City.

He would like to have your nominations for the ADM assignments as quickly as possible. Please weigh these selections carefully, as in some cases it may be desirable to assign to the T.B.A. promotional activity a man who is already an ADM and who would then be replaced in his present assignment. In others, the T.B.A. man would be one promoted to that position. It goes without saying that the success of this activity will depend on the type of personnel selected.

(2) As soon as the ten field T.B.A. men and the Ponca City staff are selected, it is planned to give the entire group an intensive week's training, partially at the B.F.G. factory at Miami, Oklahoma, and partially at Ponca City where training facilities will be set up.

(3) Following this training program, a team composed of B.F.G. sales executives plus Continental T.B.A. staff members will proceed on a series of one-day meetings in each of our divisions. All division sales personnel will be included in these meetings. The meetings will serve:

(a) To acquaint all Conoco divisional sales and operating personnel with The B. F. Goodrich Company and its products, the plan of procedure, and product information.

(b) To provide an opportunity for the Continental selling personnel to meet informally and get acquainted with the local Goodrich people in each division.

(4) A request to all division managers for a list of Conoco accounts that are now handling B.F.G. products or who may be considefed as good immediate prospects was sent some time ago. So far we have received lists from seven divisions and are awaiting responses from the others. These will be submitted to the B. F. G. Company and commissions will be paid on the business now passing through them, effective with the date of our contract.

(5) Consideration will be given to various alternatives on station identification which Goodrich provides, no charge. Regional and division managers will have a voice in determining what is adequate and proper identification for our various types of company-owned stations. We have provided B.F.G. with pictures of the various types now in operation. It is not believed that a uniform plan of identification is essential for all regions.

As soon as this is decided in general terms, the B.F.G. Company will start their station identification crews on the assignment. It is the B.F.G. Company's policy to have Continental make the decision as to the extent and types of identification desired for each station.

Standardization of dealer identification is not contemplated in view of the fact that those Conoco dealers that are presently selling B.F.G. products are probably identified adequately, and those that take on the line will have their own ideas as to what identification they desire.

As of the present, B.F.G. sales personnel has been encouraged to solicit Conoco accounts. However, no arrangements for the training of Continental field personnel should be made until our initial meeting has been held in each division launching the whole T.B.A. project.

(6) As soon as possible, we plan to launch our intercompany publicity and announcement covering products, personnel, station identification, and other pertinent information regarding the program in the Conoco Triangle and The Conocoan.

(7) Steps are being taken to revise our present credit card to include the purchase of Goodrich tires, batteries, and accessories as a regular Conoco service; and an envelope stuffer is being prepared to be included in statements to all present credit card holders acquainting them with this new service.

(8) An outline of the procedures to be followed in the handling of different types of accounts such as lessees, dealers, jobbers, wholesale distributors, and commission agents is being prepared. The last mentioned category will require careful consideration before we can outline a policy to cover commission agents and their outlets. In the meantime, we have asked the B.F.G. Company not to approach or solicit any of our commission agents until our policy is crystallized.

(9) The B.F.G. Company is instituting a Pre-Memorial Day merchandising campaign which will be available to all Conoco dealers handling the Goodrich line. It will be promoted entirely by the B.F.G. local sales force and will not involve our own men at this early date. Several appropriate "leaders" have been designated as "customer getters" to stimulate tire (as well as petroleum product) sales prior to the holiday. Also, there will be included an opportunity for the dealer to partake in a local direct mail campaign, the details of which will be furnished by the B.F.G. Company.

They have been authorized to proceed with this campaign, and our Advertising Department will contribute appropriate Conoco copy to be included in the various pieces.

(10) We are all quite pleased in the appointment of Mr. H. A. (Hack) Cunningham of The B. F. Goodrich Company as the special representative for the Continental Oil Company account. Hack to date has been handling the Texas Company account, was born in Roxton, Texas, literally "grew up" in the rubber industry, and was a fighter pilot in the Air Force of the U. S. Navy with the rank of Lieut. Commander. He will devote 100 per cent of

SUBJECT: T.B.A. SALES - OCTOBER AND CUMULATIVE

Two new faces forced their way into the number two and three positions during October. We welcome Oklahoma City and Chicago divisions and hope for repeat performances. Denver regained number one position and keeps crowding Kansas City for the lead for the cumulative period.

T.B.A. Sales 1952

October		Cumulative
Denver	$78,325	Kansas City	$367,287
Oklahoma City	55,676	Denver	354,804
Chicago	53,229	Lincoln	265,607

Sales Per 1,000 Gallons Gasoline

Denver with $9.77 and Oklahoma City with $8.14 are getting in the big league class. Those boys talk in terms of $10 per 1,000 gallons of gasoline and like to refer to their volume of dollar sales as 1 cent of T.B.A. for every gallon of gasoline sold. This ratio is for total division gasoline sales and includes all classes of buyers.

Sales Per 1,000 Gallons Gasoline

October 1952		Cumulative
Denver	$9.77	Kansas City	$4.51
Oklahoma City	8.14	Denver	4.39
Salt Lake	7.58	Houston	3.83

For years all of us have had the ratio yardstick applied to our work. We suggest this method of comparison be used by our field forces. The T.B.A. Division is proud of the job the divisions have done each month as a quick glance shows a combined increase in dollars per 1,000 gallons of gasoline.

Month	Sales per 1,000 gallons of gasoline
June	$2.84
July	5.15
August	6.28
September	6.66
October	6.75

Battery sales in October established a new high and helps boost an extremely weak spot.

Battery Sales

June	$14,038
July	28,002
August	33,263
September	45,689
October	51,395

We still have too many dealers that think they are in the battery business because they have two or three in stock or on order. The successful battery retailer claims he never got in the battery business until he carried at least a 60-day inventory.

The battery industry furnishes the following sales flow which shows the last 60 days of the year produces 22 per cent of the annual sales volume:

January	7.2%	July	8.2%
February	5.4	August	10.6
March	4.5	September	13.0
April	4.2	October	13.6
May	5.1	November	11.9
June	6.1	December	10.2

TO: Regional Managers of Marketing
Division Managers of Marketing

SUBJECT: T.B.A. SALES NOVEMBER AND CUMULATIVE

Congratulations to Joe Dickey and his Kansas Citians for top T.B.A. volume in November. Also, congratulations to the Lincoln Division for second place and to Denver Division for third position.

T.B.A. SALES

November 1952		Cumulative
Kansas City	$66,941	Kansas City	$434,228
Lincoln	54,859	Denver	406,884
Denver	52,836	Lincoln	321,222

Butte Division did a most outstanding job by selling $17.51 worth of T.B.A. for each 1,000 gallons of gasoline. This also goes for Salt Lake with $11.82 worth of T.B.A. for each 1,000 gallons of gasoline. Kansas City almost came in with a penny's worth of T.B.A. for each gallon of gasoline.

SALES PER 1,000 GALLONS GASOLINE

Include some back reports

November 1952		Cumulative
Butte	$17.51	Kansas City	$4.92
Salt Lake	11.82	Butte	4.75
Kansas City	9.64	Denver	4.66

In all ten divisions you sold $8.07 worth of T.B.A. per 1,000 gallons of gasoline. Looks like we might be averaging $10 per thousand gallons in another couple of months.

Total tire sales fell $2,400, and battery sales fell $5,000 under October, but accessory sales gained $10,000.

The 1-2-3 positions on November sales of tires, batteries, and accessories were occupied by the following:

Position	Tires And Tubes	Batteries	Accessories
1	Kansas City	Kansas City	Kansas City
2	Lincoln	Denver	Denver
3	Chicago	Lincoln	Oklahoma City

On tire sales Denver almost pushed Chicago out of third position, Fort Worth ran a close fourth on battery sales, and Lincoln was only .26 behind Oklahoma City on accessory sales. It is a very healthy sign to observe the competitive spirit that exists; and with each division trying to outsell the others, our T.B.A. sales are certain to continue to grow by leaps and bounds.

With the splendid support you, your assistants, and your field men are giving the program, you are bound to enjoy a successful 1953 on T.B.A. sales.

November sales results by divisions and regions and November statement of BFG approved accounts are attached.

FTC Docket #6485

RESPONSE OF CONTINENTAL OIL COMPANY
TO
ITEM 1 of SPECIFICATION IV OF SUBPOENA

The monthly report "TBA Sales, Regional Sales" similar to Items 10, 13, 18 and 21 of Specification III was discontinued in the early part of 1953, and a search of our records reveals only one copy of such report, same being styled "TBA Regional Sales for February, 1953, and Cumulative". A copy of this tabulation or report is annexed hereto as EXHIBIT T.

Conoco has at all times issued another form of monthly report of TBA Sales by Divisions (similar to the report set out in Item 22 of Specification III). The so-called "Regional Sales Report" was merely a duplicative report of the Divisional Sales Report which codified the same information by Conoco's five Marketing Regions. In lieu of the discontinued reports requested by the Subpoena, copies of the regular so-called "Divisional TBA Sales Report", together with special cumulative reports covering the period from December, 1952, through June, 1956, are annexed hereto as EXHIBITS T-1 thru T-45.

TBA Program
Statement of Policy

Circular Letter No. 557

Messrs. R. R. Kibbe
J. A. Winger
C. N. Brooks
D. E. Beaton

Gentlemen:

This letter replaces and cancels Circular Letter No. 524 of December 19, 1951, under the above subject. It does not introduce any change in our policy of long standing, but is intended to:

A. Assist our personnel in presenting the merits of the program to dealers by stating the reasons for recommending Firestone or Goodrich as a supplier.

B. Define Division Management's responsibilities in administering the TBA program.

C. Outline the duties and responsibilities of field personnel charged with carrying out the program in the field.

Respondents' Exhibit 2A

I. What the Texas Company's TBA Program Is

The aim of the Company's TBA program is to encourage dealers to expand their business beyond the sale of petroleum products; and to counsel with and continually assist Texaco dealers to establish and maintain superior service to their customers, maintain an adequate and balanced stock of fast-moving TBA items and to improve their methods of merchandising so that they will be able to take full advantage of the profit potentials available to them through good service station operations.

Accordingly, The Texas Company recommends that its dealers handle Firestone or Goodrich. However, notwithstanding the fact that the Company recommends to its dealers these certain lines of TBA merchandise, it should be clearly understood by all concerned that the Company has neither the right nor the desire to dictate to the dealer the brand or type of merchandise he should handle, or the source from which he should purchase such merchandise, or to require him to handle any TBA merchandise.

II. Why Firestone and Goodrich Lines Were Selected for Recommendation to Texaco Dealers

The TBA merchandise lines and merchandising policies of both Firestone and Goodrich offer many advantages to the dealers, including a complete line of high quality automotive products to meet practically all the needs of the motorist. Firestone and Goodrich products have national acceptance, backed by extensive national advertising, and are distributed in all 48 states, with sales and delivery service available through 1,266 salary operated supply points and numerous dealer operated stores carrying the complete line.

Another advantage of handling these lines is that the dealer can purchase his entire TBA requirements from one source, conveniently located, thus earning extra discounts through volume purchases. Both Firestone and Goodrich have extensive sales promotion programs designed expressly to fit the needs of their service station accounts. Point-of-sale promotional material and cooperative advertising are available on a low-cost or no-cost basis. They also have a large sales force fully trained to assist the service station dealers to make the most of their TBA opportunities.

All these factors tend to increase the saleability of Firestone and Goodrich products, and thus increase the profits of the dealers handling such lines.

Respondents' Exhibit 2B

III. Responsibilities of Division Management in Administering the TBA Program

The proper administration of The Texas Company's TBA program in the field is the direct responsibility of Division Management. They should see to it that each member of the field organization who normally contacts dealers, consignees and distributors:

(1) Understands that even though The Texas Company does not handle tires, batteries and auto supplies, it recognizes the advantages to be derived by the dealer from the handling of such merchandise and the necessity for the dealer to do so in order to be competitive, meet the requirements of his customers, and enjoy more profitable operations.

(2) Becomes familiar with the lines and basic sales policies and promotional and merchandising programs of Firestone and Goodrich, including their Suggested Basic Stock Assortment and Inventory Guide Systems.

(3) Handles assigned duties outlined in Section IV.

Respondents' Exhibit 2C

RRK-JAW-CNB-DEB—#3

IV. Duties of Texaco Sales Personnel Charged With Handling TBA Program in the Field

Listed below are the responsibilities and activities which are part of the regularly assigned duties of selling personnel who normally contact dealers, consignees or distributors:

(1) Present the merits of our TBA program, recommending the products of Firestone or Goodrich if best suited to the dealer's interest.

(2) Recommendations with respect to TBA merchandise made by a Texaco representative to a Texaco dealer should in the best interest of the dealer take into consideration the following factors:

(a) The dealer's requirements based on an analysis of the potential volume available within the dealer's specific trading area;

(b) The availability of a convenient source of supply and the frequency of contact and type of service to be afforded the dealer by a wholesale supplier, as well as the supplier's ability and willingness to assist the dealer to be competitive in the market at all times;

(c) The established representation of the tire company in the area.

Respondents' Exhibit 2C

(3) If, after a straightforward sales presentation of the Company's TBA program, and a full explanation of the merits of such program, the dealer should in exercising his free choice of a brand of TBA merchandise express his preference for the Goodrich or Firestone line, the Texaco representative should promptly arrange to introduce to him a sales representative of the supplier chosen by the dealer. It should be recognized at all times that the negotiations between the dealer and the tire company representative, and any purchase arrangements resulting therefrom, are matters for their mutual consideration. The Texaco representative, however, should be prepared and willing to lend any advice and counsel that may be requested of him by the dealer during such negotiations.

RRK-JAW-CNB-DEB—#4

(4) In an effort to help dealers expand and develop their business, the Company urges them to stock an adequate amount of TBA merchandise to serve fully the motorists' needs. Texaco selling personnel, with the dealers approval, will assist in the physical installation of an "Inventory Guide System", and continue to assist in the maintenance until its use is habitual with the dealer, regardless of the brand chosen by the dealer. The Firestone or Goodrich "Suggested Basic Stock Assortment and Inventory Guide System" is considered among the simplest methods available to assure the maintenance of a well-balanced stock of fast-moving TBA merchandise, and dealers should be advised of this and urged to consider its installation and use.

(5) Similar guidance and assistance should be offered in the use and maintenance of TBA display programs, and dealers should be urged to utilize all appropriate space available to them in building displays that will attract customers and increase sales.

(6) The Company's sales personnel should be sufficiently alert at each visit to a service station to call the dealer's attention to their willingness to aid him by actually writing up the dealer's order for Goodrich or Firestone merchandise. As a further assistance to the dealer, Texaco personnel should personally mail or deliver such orders to the dealer's source of supply.

Orders should be written on the forms furnished by Firestone and Goodrich and carried by Texaco personnel at all times.

(7) Although reference is made heretofore to dealers, it should be understood that every phase of the program is adaptable to TBA programs of consignees and distributors. Equal effort should be made by the Company's personnel to sell consignees and distributors on the merits of the program and the benefits to be derived by adopting it for their own use and wholeheartedly encouraging the dealers they serve to use it.

The importance of respecting the independence of the Texaco dealer and his right to exercise his free and independent judgment with respect to the brand of TBA merchandise he will handle, and the quantities he will purchase, cannot be overemphasized. Insofar as The Texas Company is concerned, no TBA supplier shall be preferred over any other as to any territory or portion thereof.

The success of the TBA Program depends upon the kind of a selling job that is done. The principles of the Texaco Selling Method are sound and appropriate, and should be applied as wholeheartedly in handling this program as in all other sales efforts.

Gentlemen:

I have your complaint with reference to the B. F. Goodrich Company, et al., Docket No. 6485 and have noted same most carefully.

I am enclosing herewith a copy of your letter with the questions answered. I am giving you just a little history of my dealings with The Texas Company. In 1914 they set me up as just a little Distributor and I have kept on with them, this being the forty-second year. I have added to my line during this time, and today we have U. S. Tires, Exide Batteries, and N.A.P.A. Parts line. We have never purchased any B. F. Goodrich or Firestone products. I have been asked if I would like to handle Firestone through the Texas Company with no pressure at all put on me to do it. The Texas Company has never high pressured me during the forty-two years I have been dealing with them. I cannot make any complaint at all against them today.

I have around one hundred outlets handling their products in addition to farm trade. I have about fifteen hundred accounts, and our purchases are supplied by the Texas Company.

Of course, other oil companies have attempted to sell us their products but we are sold completely on The Texas Company and their employees. We think they are the best, based on the way they have handled us during this time. If I can be of any more service, please advise.

1. Type outlet: (a) Consignee (b) Distributor
   (c) Service Station (d) If service station, lease contract
2. Date present operator acquired the outlet.
3. Name of former operator, if known.

D. E. Beaton (6)

Gentlemen:

The petroleum trade journals during the past several weeks have been carrying reports of the anti-trust suit being conducted by the Government against the Standard Oil Company of California. One of the principal items of discussion in this suit is the question of influence being exerted by the petroleum supplier on the gasoline dealer to have him purchase directly or indirectly certain items for resale through the dealer station. In view of this it seems advisable to restate our policy.

With all of our dealers, whether they are operators of Company owned or Company leased service stations or dealers operating their own service stations, we have a sales contract which provides for the purchase by the dealer of certain estimated quantities of Texaco products. This contract does not prevent the dealer from purchasing competitive products in addition to Texaco products, though generally the dealer recognizes that there are definite advantages in handling one nationally advertised line of petroleum products.

A Texaco dealer is an independent businessman and he is entitled to conduct his business according to his own desires. Our men are expected to help the Texaco dealer to improve his business and make many helpful suggestions to that end. They may explain to the dealer the advantages of tying-in with a national program developed for the more than 40,000 Texaco Dealers throughout the country, but it is not in accord with the dealer's contract with The Texas Company to infer or indicate to a Texaco dealer directly or indirectly that any purchase by him of any type of merchandise from any supplier whatsoever will result in a reduction of the supply of petroleum products available to him or in a cancellation of any sales contract or lease agreement that may be in effect or in any other event which will make him feel that more persuasion is being exercised by us than would normally and properly be used by us toward a customer.

The Texas Company does not sell tires, tubes, batteries, accessories or items other than petroleum that might be sold through a service station, but we recognize that it is to the advantage of the dealer to handle such merchandise in order to increase his earnings and enable him to have a more profitable operation. In fact, we encourage the dealer to expand his business beyond the sale of petroleum products for those reasons, and because, in the case of a Company owned or Company leased service station which has been leased to the dealer for operation, it means a more profitable venture through our facilities and eventually increases our earnings as well as the dealer's through that location.

Messrs. RRK-SCB-CBB-DEB

Even though we urge and encourage the dealer to handle merchandise other than petroleum products, we have neither the right nor the desire to dictate to him or influence him in any way as to the type of merchandise he should handle or the source from which he should purchase it. We can and do recommend certain lines which we feel fit into the program of handling such nationally advertised products as Texaco, but our representatives are not to exert any influence upon the dealer to have him follow our suggestions.

We frequently install fixtures and display shelves at Company owned or Company leased service stations for use by the dealer in selling merchandise, and we should urge the dealer to use those facilities to increase his earnings and to keep on hand at all times a satisfactory amount of merchandise of the proper type, but again no pressure is to be put on the dealer to do so. There is no objection, after proper facilities for the sale of tires, tubes, batteries, and accessories have been provided at a service station, to our representatives introducing to the dealer a salesman who has such items for sale, or even of recommending to the dealer that he give consideration to the purchase of that salesman's merchandise, but it must be borne in mind at all times that after the introduction the negotiations and arrangements between the dealer and the TBA salesman are not to be interfered with or influenced in any way by The Texas Company's representative.

I emphasize again that the Texaco dealer is an independent businessman and he must be permitted to operate as one. Any one who violates these policies may be subject to immediate dismissal from the Company's service.

Please pass this information on to your division offices for dissemination to the people interested.

Gentlemen:

In order that all concerned may be fully informed, The Texas Company's policy with respect to the procedure to be followed in carrying out its TBA program, which policy has been in effect for many years, is reiterated below:

1. When presenting the merits of the Company's TBA program to Texaco dealers, the selling personnel should explain to the dealer that even though The Texas Company does not handle tires, batteries and auto supplies, it recognizes the advantages to be derived by the dealer from the handling of such merchandise and the necessity for the dealer to do so in order to be competitive, meet the requirements of his customers, and enjoy more profitable operations.

   Texaco dealers should be encouraged to expand their business beyond the sale of petroleum products for the reasons outlined.

2. To facilitate the handling of TBA merchandise by Texaco dealers the Company provides adequate display equipment in its service stations for the sale of such items.

3. The Company recommends certain lines of merchandise which are nationally advertised and enjoy national distribution, just as is true with respect to Texaco products.

4. Notwithstanding the fact that the Company recommends to its dealers certain lines of TBA merchandise, it should be recognized by all concerned that the Company has neither the right nor desire to dictate to the dealer the type of merchandise he should handle or the source from which he should purchase such merchandise.

5. In the interest of the dealer any recommendation with respect to TBA merchandise made by a Texaco representative to a Texaco dealer should take into consideration the following factors:

   (a) The dealer's requirements based on an analysis of the potential market;

   (b) The availability of a convenient source of supply;

In an effort to assist dealers to acquire and develop their business, the Company makes [illegible] on hand an adequate amount of merchandise of [illegible] to serve fully the patrons' needs. The Firestone and Goodrich Suggested Basic Stock Agreement [illegible] Guide System is considered to be the simplest [illegible] to assure the maintenance of adequate [illegible] moving TBA merchandise. The Texaco selling personnel should therefore offer to make recommendations with respect to the proper selection of basic stock of TBA merchandise and to assist them in the setting up [illegible] the Inventory Guide System. After the inventory is properly set up Texaco personnel should take an active part in maintaining and handling of such inventory records to the extent of taking orders for merchandise required, as indicated in Item 8.

8. If the dealer so desires, The Texas Company's selling personnel will further aid him by actually writing up the dealer's order for Goodrich or Firestone merchandise and will personally mail or deliver such orders to the dealer's regular source of supply.

10. Although in the foregoing program reference is made to Texaco dealers, it should be understood that every phase of the program outlined is readily adaptable to all TBA programs of Texaco consignees and distributors. Equal effort should be made by the Company's selling personnel to sell them on the merits of the program and the benefits to be derived by adopting it for their own use, and wholeheartedly encouraging the dealers they serve to adopt it.

11. Definite responsibilities and activities necessary to the effective adaptation of the Company's TBA program are a part of the regularly assigned duties of all the Texas Company's field personnel who normally contact dealers, or consignees, or distributors. The Company's selling personnel are expected to become familiar with the Firestone and Goodrich Suggested Basic Stock Assortment and Inventory Guide System and the merchandising of TBA products generally. It should be clearly understood, however, that assistance will also be rendered by Texaco personnel to all dealers in setting up their own Basic Stock Assortment and Inventory Guide System regardless of the brand of merchandise handled.

It should be further understood by all concerned that the activities of The Texas Company's personnel in carrying out its TBA program must be considered as an addition to the efforts or activities of the TBA suppliers' selling personnel and not in lieu thereof.

12. The importance of respecting the independence of the Texaco dealer and his right to exercise his free and independent judgment with respect to the kind of TBA merchandise he will handle, and the quantities he will purchase, cannot be over-emphasized. Insofar as The Texas Company is concerned no TBA supplier shall be preferred over any other as to any territory or portion thereof.

All these factors tend to increase the saleability of Firestone and Goodrich products and thus increase the profits of dealers handling such lines. Accordingly, [illegible] desire handle Firestone or Goodrich merchandise.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Company recommends [illegible] chandise, it should be clearly understood [illegible] the desire to dictate to the dealer [illegible] which he should purchase such merchandise, or to require him to handle any TBA [illegible]

III. DUTIES OF TEXACO SALES PERSONNEL

(1) Each member of the field organization who [illegible] utors should clearly understand that [illegible] and auto supplies, it recognizes the advantages to [illegible] merchandise and the necessity for the dealer to do [illegible] of his customers and enjoy more profitable operation.

(2) In order to present the merits of The Texas TBA Program [illegible] thoroughly familiar with the lines, the basic sales [illegible] dising programs of both Firestone and Goodrich, including [illegible] "Suggested Basic Stock Assortment and Inventory Guide Systems."

(3) Before making definite recommendations with respect to TBA merchandise to a Texaco dealer, the Texaco representative should assist the dealer in analyzing the potential volume of TBA business that the dealer can reasonably expect within the specific trading area, and help him to derive at a basic minimum inventory that should permit adequate service of his particular market.

One of the important responsibilities of Texaco sales personnel is that they should continually be in position to advise dealers of forthcoming Firestone or Goodrich promotional programs so that the dealer can take advantage of every opportunity to increase his profits and be more competitive.

Respondents' Exhibit 10C

DOCKET NO. 8911 EXHIBIT NO. 10-C

(4) Any recommendation with respect to brand of TBA merchandise made by the Texaco representative should be predicated on the availability of a convenient source of supply, the frequency of contact and the type of service to be afforded the dealer by the wholesale supplier. A further factor should be the supplier's ability and willingness to assist the dealer to be competitive in the promotion of sales. The established representation of the tire company in the area should also be taken into consideration.

(5) If, after a straightforward sales presentation of the Company's TBA program and a full explanation of the merits of such program, the dealer should in good faith express a desire to handle 3A merchandise, express his preference for the Goodrich or Firestone line, the Texaco representative should promptly arrange to introduce to him a sales representative of the company whose line the dealer prefers. It should be recognized at all times that the negotiations between the dealer and the selling representative, and any purchase arrangements resulting therefrom, are matters for their personal consideration. The Texaco representative, however, should be prepared and willing to lend any advice and counsel that may be requested of him by the dealer during such negotiations.

(6) The Firestone or Goodrich "Suggested Basic Stock Assortment and Inventory Guide System" is considered among the simplest methods available to assure the maintenance of a well balanced stock of fast-moving TBA merchandise. The Texaco representative should explain to the dealer the complete functions of the "Inventory Guide" and urge the dealer to consider its installation and use. Assuming that it is consistent with good business management to maintain proper and adequate inventories, it should be explained to the dealer that this type of Guide can be of much value to him in effecting sales and in making it easier for him to buy only the merchandise needed. Texaco selling personnel should not only assist in the physical installation of the Inventory Guide System, but should continue to assist the dealer in the maintenance of the Guide until its use by the dealer becomes established routine in his everyday operation.

(7) It has been said that merchandise well displayed is half sold. Eye-catching displays of TBA products at service stations, like petroleum product displays, can be of utmost value to dealers in increasing their sales and profits. It is also important that the price be prominently shown on all TBA merchandise displayed and that the merchandise be kept in a clean and orderly arrangement. To help attract more customers and make more sales, both Firestone and Goodrich make available to dealers an inexpensive pricing kit as well as display packages containing up-to-date and attractive point of sale material.

Texaco representatives should urge dealers to take full advantage of the tire company's offer of assistance in improving their station's "sparkle" with displays that present an attractive appearance. The Company's selling personnel should assist dealers in utilizing all appropriate space available to them for building displays that will attract customers and increase sales.

(8) The regular order forms furnished by Firestone and Goodrich are to be serviced by Texaco selling personnel at all times. At each visit to a service station, the Company's sales personnel should call the dealer's attention to the fact that as a further assistance to him in keeping his desired inventory balance, he will write up the dealer's order for the Goodrich or Firestone merchandising that is needed. Texaco personnel should personally mail or deliver such orders to the dealer's source of supply.

(9) Holders of The Texas Company's National Credit Cards are privileged to purchase Firestone or Goodrich TBA merchandise from Texaco dealers on their regular 30-day account, or may, when desired, extend their payments for such merchandise over a period up to 6 months. If properly promoted by the dealer, this Texaco Deferred Payment Plan can be of material assistance to him in increasing his sales and profits without the necessity of tying up the dealer's working capital by increasing receivable. The Company's selling personnel should urge dealers to take full advantage of this dealer aid for the convenience of their customers, which is available without cost. The Texaco representative should also make sure that the dealer understands the proper handling of customer charges for TBA merchandise on The Texas Company's Deferred Payment Plan.

(10) Although reference is made heretofore to dealers, it should be understood that every phase of the TBA program is adaptable to TBA programs of consignees and distributors. Equal effort should be made by the Company's personnel to sell consignees and distributors on the merits of the program as a means of developing their dealers, and the benefits to be derived by adopting it for their own use.

The principles of the Texaco Selling Method are sound and appropriate and should be applied wholeheartedly by The Texas Company's selling personnel when selling the merits of or handling any phase of the Company's TBA program. The success of the TBA program depends upon the kind of selling job that is done. The handling of the TBA program with dealers is an important part of the regularly assigned duties of the Company's selling personnel. Nevertheless, the importance of respecting the independence of the Texaco dealer and his right to exercise his free and independent judgment on all matters and all phases of his business cannot be overemphasized.

Gentlemen:

For your information and guidance, I am quoting below letter dated June 1 from Mr. Walter Mochuli, our General Sales Manager:

"The petroleum trade journals during the past several weeks have been carrying reports of the anti-trust suit being conducted by the Government against the Standard Oil Company of California. One of the principal items of discussion in this suit is the question of influence being exerted by the petroleum supplier on the gasoline dealer to have him purchase directly or indirectly certain items for resale through the dealer station. In view of this it seems advisable to restate our policy.

"With all of our dealers, whether they are operators of Company owned or Company leased service stations or dealers operating their own service stations, we have a sales contract which provides for the purchase by the dealer of certain estimated quantities of Texaco products. This contract does not prevent the dealer from purchasing competitive products in addition to Texaco products, though generally the dealer recognizes that there are definite advantages in handling one nationally advertised line of petroleum products.

"A Texaco dealer is an independent businessman and he is entitled to conduct his business according to his own desires. Our men are expected to help the Texaco dealer to improve his business and make many helpful suggestions to that end. They may explain to the dealer the advantages of tying-in with a national program developed for the more than 40,000 Texaco Dealers throughout the country, but it is not in accord with the dealer's contract with The Texas Company to infer or indicate to a Texaco dealer directly or indirectly that any purchase by him of any type of merchandise from any supplier whatsoever will result in a reduction of the supply of petroleum products available to him or in a cancellation of any sales contract or lease agreement that may be in effect or in any other event which will make him feel that more persuasion is being exercised by us than would normally and properly be used by us toward a customer.

"The Texas Company does not sell tires, tubes, batteries, accessories or items other than petroleum that might be sold through a service station, but we recognize that it is to the advantage of the dealer to handle such merchandise in order to increase his earnings and enable him to have a more profitable operation. In fact, we encourage the dealer to expand his business beyond the sale of petroleum products for those reasons, and because, in the case of a Company owned or Company leased service station which has been leased to the dealer for operation, it means a more profitable venture through our facilities and eventually increases our earnings as well as the dealer's through that location.

"Even though we urge and encourage the dealer to handle merchandise other than petroleum products, we have neither the right nor the desire to dictate to him or influence him in any way as to the type of merchandise he should handle or the source from which he should purchase it. We can and do recommend certain lines which we feel fit into the program of handling such nationally advertised products as Texaco, but our representatives are not to exert any influence upon the dealer to have him follow our suggestions.

"We frequently install fixtures and display shelves at Company owned or Company leased service stations for use by the dealer in selling merchandise, and we should urge the dealer to use those facilities to increase his earnings and to keep on hand at all times a satisfactory amount of merchandise of the proper type, but again no pressure is to be put on the dealer to do so. There is no objection, after proper facilities for the sale of tires, tubes, batteries, and accessories have been provided at a service station, to our representatives introducing to the dealer a salesman who has such items for sale, or even of recommending to the dealer that he give consideration to the purchase of that salesman's merchandise, but it must be borne in mind at all times that after the introduction the negotiations and arrangements between the dealer and the TBA salesman are not to be interfered with or influenced in any way by The Texas Company's representative.

"I emphasize again that the Texaco dealer is an independent businessman and he must be permitted to operate

THE TEXAS COMPANY'S TBA PROGRAM
STATEMENT OF POLICY

Circular Letter No. 155

Division Managers
Central Territory

Gentlemen:

In order that all concerned may be fully informed, The Texas Company's policy with respect to the procedure to be followed in carrying out its TBA program, which policy has been in effect for many years, is reiterated below:

1. When presenting the merits of the Company's TBA program to Texaco dealers, the selling personnel should explain to the dealer that even though The Texas Company does not handle tires, batteries and auto supplies, it recognizes the advantages to be derived by the dealer from the handling of such merchandise and the necessity for the dealer to do so in order to be competitive, meet the requirements of his customers, and enjoy more profitable operations.

   Texaco dealers should be encouraged to expand their business beyond the sale of petroleum products for the reasons outlined.

2. To facilitate the handling of TBA merchandise by Texaco dealers the Company provides adequate display equipment in its service stations for the sale of such items.

3. The Company recommends certain lines of merchandise which are nationally advertised and enjoy national distribution, just as is true with respect to Texaco products.

4. Notwithstanding the fact that the Company recommends to its dealers certain lines of TBA merchandise, it should be recognized by all concerned that the Company has neither the right nor desire to dictate to the dealer the type of merchandise he should handle or the source from which he should purchase such merchandise.

Respondents' Exhibit 18C

5. In the interest of the dealer any recommendation with respect to TBA merchandise made by a Texaco representative to a Texaco dealer should take into consideration the following factors:

(a) The dealer's requirements based on an analysis of the potential market;

(b) The availability of a convenient source of supply;

(c) The representation of the tire companies already established in the area, and the type of service that will be available through the wholesale supply point;

(d) In all dealings the fact that the Texaco dealer is an independent businessman must be emphasized and he must be permitted to operate as such.

6. If, in exercising his own free choice of the brand of TBA merchandise he desires to handle, the dealer expresses a preference either for the Goodrich or Firestone line, following a clear cut and straight forward presentation of the Texaco TBA program as outlined, the Texaco representative should assist the dealer further by arranging to introduce him to a sales representative of the supplier chosen by the dealer. It should be recognized at all times that the negotiations between the dealer and the TBA representative, and any purchase arrangement resulting therefrom, are matters for their mutual consideration, and the Texaco representative should not interfere with or attempt to influence such negotiations or purchase arrangements in any way.

7. The Company's assistance to Texaco dealers goes beyond the mere recommendation covering the Goodrich or Firestone line. In an effort to assist dealers to expand and develop their business, the Company urges them to keep on hand an adequate amount of merchandise of the proper type to serve fully the motorists' needs. The Firestone and Goodrich Suggested Basic Stock Assortment and Inventory Guide System is considered to be the simplest method available to assure the maintenance of a well balanced stock of fast moving TBA merchandise.

The Texaco selling personnel should therefore offer to make recommendations to the dealers with respect to the proper selection of basic stocks of TBA merchandise and to assist them in the initial installation of the Inventory Guide System. After the inventory is properly set up Texaco personnel should take no further part in maintaining and handling of such inventory except to the extent of taking orders for merchandise required, as indicated in Item 8.

8. If the dealer so desires, The Texas Company's selling personnel will further aid him by actually writing up the dealer's order for Goodrich or Firestone merchandise and will personally mail or deliver such orders to the dealer's regular source of supply.

9. The primary purpose of The Texas Company in sponsoring its TBA program is to counsel with and continually assist Texaco dealers so that they will establish and maintain superior service to their customers and thereby earn greater profits.

10. Although in the foregoing program reference is made to Texaco dealers, it should be understood that every phase of the program outlined is readily adaptable to all TBA programs of Texaco consignees and distributors. Equal effort should be made by the Company's selling personnel to sell them on the merits of the program and the benefits to be derived by adopting it for their own use, and wholeheartedly encouraging the dealers they serve to adopt it.

11. Definite responsibilities and activities necessary to the effective adaptation of the Company's TBA program are a part of the regularly assigned duties of all of The Texas Company's field personnel who normally contact dealers, or consignees, or distributors. The Company's selling personnel are expected to become familiar with the Firestone and Goodrich Suggested Basic Stock Assortment and Inventory Guide System and the merchandising of TBA products generally. It should be clearly understood, however, that assistance will also be rendered by Texaco personnel to all dealers in setting up their own Basic Stock Assortment and Inventory Guide System regardless of the brand of merchandise handled.

It should be further understood by all concerned that the activities of The Texas Company's personnel in carrying out its TBA program must be considered as an addition to the efforts or activities of the TBA suppliers' selling personnel and not in lieu thereof.

Division Managers -4- 1/3/52

12. The importance of respecting the independence of the Texaco dealer and his right to exercise his free and independent judgment with respect to the brand of TBA merchandise he will handle, and the quantities he will purchase, cannot be over-emphasized. Insofar as The Texas Company is concerned no TBA supplier shall be preferred over any other as to any territory or portion thereof.

The foregoing covers completely The Texas Company's TBA policy of long standing and it must be adhered to without deviation.

Yours very truly,

THE TEXAS COMPANY Denver, Colorado, January 7, 1954

TBA PROGRAM
STATEMENT OF POLICY

CIRCULAR LETTER NO. 369

State Managers
Zone Managers
Denver Division

Gentlemen:

This letter replaces and cancels our Circular Letter No. 355 of January 14, 1952, under the above subject. It does not introduce any change in our policy of long standing, but is intended to:

A. Assist our personnel in presenting the merits of the program to dealers by stating the reasons for recommending Firestone or Goodrich as a supplier.

B. Outline the duties and responsibilities of field personnel charged with carrying out the program in the field.

I. WHAT THE TEXAS COMPANY'S TBA PROGRAM IS

The aim of the Company's TBA program is to encourage dealers to expand their business beyond the sale of petroleum products; and to counsel with and continually assist Texaco dealers to establish and maintain superior service to their customers, maintain an adequate and balanced stock of fast-moving TBA items and to improve their methods of merchandising so that they will be able to take full advantage of the profit potentials available to them through good service station operations.

Accordingly, The Texas Company recommends that its dealers handle Firestone or Goodrich. However, notwithstanding the fact that the Company recommends to its dealers these certain lines of TBA merchandise, it should be clearly understood by all concerned that the Company has neither the right nor the desire to dictate to the dealer the brand or type of merchandise he should handle, or the source from which he should purchase such merchandise, or to require him to handle any TBA merchandise.

II. WHY FIRESTONE AND GOODRICH LINES WERE SELECTED FOR RECOMMENDATION TO TEXACO DEALERS

The TBA merchandise lines and merchandising policies of both Firestone and Goodrich offer many advantages to the dealers, including a complete line of high quality automotive products to meet practically all the needs of the motorist. Firestone and Goodrich products have national acceptance, backed by extensive

..tional advertising, and are distributed in all 48 states, with sales and delivery service available through 1,266 salary operated supply points and numerous dealer operated stores carrying the complete line.

Another advantage of handling these lines is that the dealer can purchase his entire TBA requirements from one source, conveniently located, thus earning extra discounts through volume purchases. Both Firestone and Goodrich have extensive sales promotion programs designed expressly to fit the needs of their service station accounts. Point-of-sale promotional material and cooperative advertising are available on a low-cost or no-cost basis. They also have a large sales force fully trained to assist the service station dealers to make the most of their TBA opportunities.

All these factors tend to increase the salability of Firestone and Goodrich products, and thus increase the profits of the dealers handling such lines.

III. RESPONSIBILITIES OF FIELD PERSONNEL IN ADMINISTERING THE TBA PROGRAM

Every field member who normally contacts dealers, consignees and distributors should:

(1) Understand that even though The Texas Company does not handle tires, batteries and auto supplies, it recognizes the advantages to be derived by the dealer from the handling of such merchandise and the necessity for the dealer to do so in order to be competitive, meet the requirements of his customers, and enjoy more profitable operations.

(2) Become familiar with the lines and basic sales policies and promotional and merchandising programs of Firestone and Goodrich, including their Suggested Basic Stock Assortment and Inventory Guide Systems.

(3) Handle assigned duties outlined in Section IV.

IV. DUTIES OF TEXACO SALES PERSONNEL CHARGED WITH HANDLING TBA PROGRAM IN THE FIELD

Listed below are the responsibilities and activities which are part of the regularly assigned duties of selling personnel who normally contact dealers, consignees or distributors:

(1) Present the merits of our TBA program, recommending the products of Firestone or Goodrich if best suited to the dealer's interest.

(2) Recommendations with respect to TBA merchandise made by a Texaco representative to a Texaco dealer should in the best interest of the dealer take into consideration the following factors:

(a) The dealer's requirements based on an analysis of the potential volume available within the dealer's specific trading area;

(b) The availability of a convenient source of supply and the frequency of contact and type of service to be afforded the dealer by a wholesale supplier, as well as the supplier's ability and willingness to assist the dealer to be competitive in the market at all times;

(c) The established representation of the tire company in the area.

(3) If, after a straightforward sales presentation of the Company's TBA program, and a full explanation of the merits of such program, the dealer should in exercising his free choice of a brand of TBA merchandise express his preference for the Goodrich or Firestone line, the Texaco representative should promptly arrange to introduce to him a sales representative of the supplier chosen by the dealer. It should be recognized at all times that the negotiations between the dealer and the tire company representative, and any purchase arrangements resulting therefrom, are matters for their mutual consideration. The Texaco representative, however, should be prepared and willing to lend any advice and counsel that may be requested of him by the dealer during such negotiations.

(4) In an effort to help dealers expand and develop their business, the Company urges them to stock an adequate amount of TBA merchandise to serve fully the motorists' needs. Texaco selling personnel, with the dealer's approval, will assist in the physical installation of an "Inventory Guide System", and continue to assist in the maintenance until its use is habitual with the dealer, regardless of the brand chosen by the dealer. The Firestone or Goodrich "Suggested Basic Stock Assortment and Inventory Guide System" is considered among the simplest methods available to assure the maintenance of a well-balanced stock of fast-moving TBA merchandise, and dealers should be advised of this and urged to consider its installation and use.

(5) Similar guidance and assistance should be offered in the use and maintenance of TBA display programs, and dealers should be urged to utilize all appropriate space available to them in building displays that will attract customers and increase sales.

(6) The Company's sales personnel should be sufficiently alert at each visit to a service station to call the dealer's attention to their willingness to aid him by actually writing up the dealer's order for Goodrich or Firestone merchandise. As a further assistance to the dealer, Texaco personnel should personally mail or deliver such orders to the dealer's source of supply. Orders should be written on the forms furnished by Firestone and Goodrich and carried by Texaco personnel at all times.

(7) Although reference is made heretofore to dealers, it should be understood that every phase of the program is adaptable to TBA programs of consignees and distributors. Equal effort should be made by the Company's personnel to sell consignees and distributors on the merits of the program and the benefits to be derived by adopting it for their own use and wholeheartedly encouraging the dealers they serve to use it.

The importance of respecting the independence of the Texaco dealer and his right to exercise his free and independent judgment with respect to the brand of TBA merchandise he will handle, and the quantities he will purchase, cannot be overemphasized. Insofar as The Texas Company is concerned, no TBA supplier shall be preferred over any other as to any territory or portion thereof.

The success of the TBA Program depends upon the kind of a selling job that is done. The principles of the Texaco Selling Method are sound and appropriate, and should be applied as wholeheartedly in handling this program as in all other sales efforts.

THE TEXAS COMPANY'S TBA PROGRAM

In order to remind our selling organization of the merits of The Texas Company's long standing TBA Program and to outline the duties and responsibilities of field personnel charged with carrying out this program, it is felt desirable to review fully herein the Company's policy with respect thereto. It is intended that these sheets be added to each salesman's portfolio "Business Builders For Texaco Dealers" and be made a part thereof, so that every salesman will at all times have with him the full explanation of the Company's TBA Policy and the detailed instructions as to how the selling organization should function under this program.

I. WHY THE TEXAS COMPANY HAS A TBA PROGRAM

It is recognized that most service station dealers cannot successfully gain and retain regular customers and reap full profits from their operation if only petroleum products are handled. Statistics prove that the average automobile owner prefers to depend on his regular service station dealer for his automotive necessities short of major repairs. These necessities, commonly known in the industry as TBA merchandise, include tires, batteries, fan belts, spark plugs, hoses, oil filters and other replacement items normally handled by most successful service station dealers, plus many of the "throw on" accessory items.

The purpose of the Company's TBA program therefore is to assist dealers to expand their business beyond the sale of petroleum products. To accomplish this Texaco selling personnel should counsel with and continually assist Texaco dealers to establish and maintain superior service to their customers, maintain an adequate and balanced stock of fast-moving TBA items and to improve their methods of merchandising so that they will be able to take full advantage of the profit potentials available to them through good service station operations.

II. WHY FIRESTONE AND GOODRICH LINES WERE SELECTED FOR RECOMMENDATION TO TEXACO DEALERS

The Texas Company believes that the TBA merchandise lines and merchandising policies of both Firestone and Goodrich offer many advantages to Texaco dealers, including a complete line of high quality automotive products to meet practically all the needs of the motorist. Firestone and Goodrich products have national acceptance, backed by extensive national advertising, and are distributed in all 48 states, with sales and delivery service available through more than 1,000 salary-operated supply points and numerous dealer operated stores which carry the complete line.

Another advantage of handling Firestone or Goodrich products is that the dealer can purchase his entire TBA requirements from one source, conveniently located, thus earning extra discounts through volume purchases. Both Firestone and Goodrich have extensive sales promotion programs designed expressly to fit the needs of their service station accounts. Point-of-Sale promotional material and cooperative advertising are available on a low-cost or no-cost basis. They also have large sales forces fully trained to assist the service station dealers to make the most of their TBA opportunities.

All these factors tend to increase the saleability of Firestone and Goodrich products, and thus increase the profits of dealers handling such lines. Accordingly, The Texas Company recommends that its dealers handle Firestone or Goodrich merchandise.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Company recommends to its dealers certain lines of TBA merchandise, it should be clearly understood by all concerned that the Company has neither the right nor the desire to dictate to the dealer the brand or type of merchandise he should handle, or the source from which he should purchase such merchandise, or to require him to handle any TBA merchandise.

III. DUTIES OF TEXACO SALES PERSONNEL

(1) Each member of the field organization who normally contacts dealers, consignees, and distributors should clearly understand that even though The Texas Company does not handle tires, batteries, and auto supplies, it recognizes the advantages to be derived by the dealer from the handling of such merchandise and the necessity for the dealer to do so in order to be competitive, meet the requirements of his customers and enjoy more profitable operations.

(2) In order to present the merits of The Texaco TBA Program all selling personnel should be thoroughly familiar with the lines, the basic sales policies, the promotional programs and the merchandising programs of both Firestone and Goodrich, including establishment and maintenance of their "Suggested Basic Stock Assortment and Inventory Guide Systems."

(3) Before making definite recommendations with respect to TBA merchandise to a Texaco dealer, the Texaco representative should assist the dealer in analyzing the potential volume of TBA business that the dealer can reasonably expect within his specific trading area, and help him to arrive at a basic minimum inventory that should permit adequate service of his particular market.

One of the important responsibilities of Texaco sales personnel is that they should continually be in position to advise dealers of forthcoming Firestone or Goodrich promotional programs so that the dealer can take advantage of every opportunity to increase his profits and be more competitive.

On June 8, 1948 Mr. H. D. Perkins addressed a letter to you, with a copy to all Field Men and Salaried Selling Organization, to which he attached a copy of Mr. Walter Hochuli's letter of June 1, addressed to Territorial Managers.

Mr. Hochuli's letter was on the same subject as this letter today and it is considered so important that we ask you to pull this letter from your files and to carefully re-read it.

I am not attempting to cover the subject of Mr. Hochuli's letter, but it behooves us to be quite certain that we understand, thoroughly, our contact relations with Texaco Dealers.

I believe it a good idea for every Representative, who supervises Salesmen, to read this Letter to them and discuss its contents in detail. New Salesmen who have been added to our payroll in the last year or so will not conversant with our Company Policies, and it is felt Salesmen who contact Dealers - Representatives of Dealer Service and Dealer Training, should be careful in their contacts with Dealers, to continually recognize the fact that Dealers are Independent Merchants and to operate as such.

Doubtless all of you have read in the Trade Magazines that a Decree has been entered in the case of United States v. Standard Oil Company of California, which has reference to agreements and understandings between the supplying company and its dealers. This decree, again, emphasizes the importance of a proper understanding of our Policy by those of our field men who contact dealers and service station operators. PERUSE MR. HOCHULI'S LETTER ABOVE REFERRED TO - thorough knowledge by every employee in the Sales Department, who, as part of his assigned duties, has occasion to contact dealers, contractors or unattached, third party or first party, who purchase a part or all of their Petroleum requirements from The Texas Company.

The petroleum trade journals during the past several weeks have been carrying reports of the anti-trust suit being conducted by the Government against the Standard Oil Company of California. One of the principal items of discussion in this suit is the question of influence being exerted by the petroleum supplier on the gasoline dealer to have him purchase directly or indirectly certain items for resale through the dealer station. In view of this it seems advisable to restate our policy.

With all of our dealers, whether they are operators of Company owned or Company leased service stations or dealers operating their own service stations, we have a sales contract which provides for the purchase by the dealer of certain estimated quantities of Texaco products. This contract does not prevent the dealer from purchasing competitive products in addition to Texaco products, though generally the dealer recognizes that there are definite advantages in handling one nationally advertised line of petroleum products.

A Texaco dealer is an independent businessman and he is entitled to conduct his business according to his own desires. Our men are expected to help the Texaco dealer to improve his business and make many helpful suggestions to that end. They may explain to the dealer the advantages of tying-in with a national program developed for the more than 40,000 Texaco dealers throughout the country, but it is not in accord with the dealer's contract with The Texas Company to infer or indicate to a Texaco dealer directly or indirectly that any purchase by him of any type of merchandise from any supplier whatsoever will result in a reduction of the supply of petroleum products available to him or in a cancellation of any sales contract or lease agreement that may be in effect or in any other event which will make him feel that more persuasion is being exercised by us than would normally and properly be used by us toward a customer.

The Texas Company does not sell tires, tubes, batteries, accessories or items other than petroleum that might be sold through a service station, but we recognize that it is to the advantage of the dealer to handle such merchandise in order to increase his earnings and enable him to have a more profitable operation. In fact, we encourage the dealer to expand his business beyond the sale of petroleum products for these reasons, and because, in the case of a Company owned or Company leased service station which has been leased to the dealer for operation, it means a more profitable venture through our facilities and eventually increases our earnings as well as the dealer's through that location.

Messrs. RMK-SCB-CBB-DEB -2- 1 Feb 1949

Even though we urge and encourage the dealer to handle merchandise other than petroleum products, we have neither the right nor the desire to dictate to him or influence him in any way as to the type of merchandise he should handle or the source from which he should purchase it. We can and do recommend certain lines which we feel fit into the program of handling such nationally advertised products as Texaco, but our representatives are not to exert any influence upon the dealer to have him follow our suggestions.

We frequently install fixtures and display shelves at Company owned or Company leased service stations for use by the dealer in selling merchandise, and we should urge the dealer to use those facilities to increase his earnings and to keep on hand at all times a satisfactory amount of merchandise of the proper type, but again no pressure is to be put on the dealer to do so. There is no objection, after proper facilities for the sale of tires, tubes, batteries, and accessories have been provided at a service station, to our representatives introducing to the dealer a salesman who has such items for sale, or even of recommending to the dealer that he give consideration to the purchase of that salesman's merchandise, but it must be borne in mind at all times that after the introduction the negotiations and arrangements between the dealer and the TBA salesman are not to be interfered with or influenced in any way by The Texas Company's representative.

I emphasize again that the Texaco dealer is an independent businessman and he must be permitted to operate as one. Any one who violates these policies may be subject o immediate dismissal from the Company's service.

Please pass this information on to your division offices for dissemination to the people interested.

Yours very truly,

WE-PD

Gentlemen:

For your information, under date of January 8, 1938, Mr. C. B. Barrett in his circular letter #909, re-issued The Company's policy with respect to our TBA Program.

This letter is hereinafter quoted in its entirety:

"In order that all concerned may be fully informed, The Texas Company's policy with respect to the procedure to be followed in carrying out its TBA Program, which policy has been in effect for many years, is reiterated below:

1. When presenting the merits of the Company's TBA Program to TEXACO Dealers, the selling personnel should explain to the Dealer that even though The Texas Company does not handle tires, batteries and auto supplies, it recognizes the advantages to be derived by the Dealer from the handling of such merchandise and the necessity for the Dealer to do so in order to be competitive, meet the requirements of his customers, and enjoy more profitable operations.

   TEXACO Dealers should be encouraged to expand their business beyond the sale of petroleum products for the reasons outlined.

2. To facilitate the handling of TBA merchandise by TEXACO Dealers the Company provides adequate display equipment in its Service Stations for the sale of such items.

3. The Company recommends certain lines of merchandise which are nationally advertised and enjoy national distribution, just as is true with respect to TEXACO Products.

4. Notwithstanding the fact that the Company recommends to its Dealers certain lines of TBA Merchandise, it should be recognized by all concerned that the Company has neither the right nor desire to dictate to the Dealer the type of merchandise he should handle or the source from which he should purchase such merchandise.

5. In the interest of the Dealer, any recommendation with respect to TBA Merchandise made by a TEXACO representative to a TEXACO Dealer should take into consideration the following factors:

(a) The Dealer's requirements based on an analysis of the potential market;

(b) The availability of a convenient source of supply;

(c) The representation of the tire companies already established in the Area, and the type of service that will be available through the wholesale supply points;

(d) In all dealings, the fact that the TEXACO Dealer is an independent businessman must be emphasized and he must be permitted to operate as such.

6. If, in exercising his own free choice of the brand of TBA merchandise he desires to handle, the Dealer expresses a preference either for the Goodrich or Firestone line, following a clear cut and straight forward presentation of the TEXACO TBA Program as outlined, the TEXACO representative should assist the Dealer further by arranging to introduce him to a sales representative of the supplier chosen by the Dealer. It should be recognized at all times that the negotiations between the Dealer and the TBA representative, and any purchase arrangement resulting therefrom, are matters for their mutual consideration, and the TEXACO representative should not interfere with or attempt to influence such negotiations or purchase arrangements in any way.

7. The Company's assistance to TEXACO Dealers goes beyond the mere recommendation covering the Goodrich or Firestone line. In an effort to assist Dealers to expand and develop their business, the Company urges them to keep on hand an adequate amount of merchandise of the proper type to serve fully the motorists' needs. The Firestone or Goodrich Suggested Basic Stock Assortment and Inventory Guide System is considered to be the simplest method available to assure the maintenance of a well balanced stock of fast moving TBA Merchandise.

The Texaco selling personnel should therefore offer to make recommendations to the Dealers with respect to the proper selection of basic stocks of TBA Merchandise and to assist them in the initial installation of the Inventory Guide System. After the inventory is properly set up, TEXACO personnel should take no further part in maintaining and handling of such inventory except to the extent of taking orders for merchandise required, as indicated in Item 8.

8. If the Dealer so desires, The Texas Company's selling personnel will further aid him by actually writing up the Dealer's order for Goodrich or Firestone Merchandise and will personally mail or deliver such orders to the Dealer's regular source of supply.

9. The primary purpose of The Texas Company in sponsoring its TBA Program is to counsel with and continually assist TEXACO Dealers so that they will establish and maintain superior service to their customers and thereby earn greater profits.

10. Although in the foregoing program reference is made to TEXACO Dealers, it should be understood that every phase of the program outlined is readily adaptable to all TBA programs of TEXACO consignees and distributors. Equal effort should be made by the Company's selling personnel to sell them on the merits of the program and the benefits to be derived by adopting it for their own use, and wholeheartedly encouraging the Dealers they serve to adopt it.

11. Definite responsibilities and activities necessary to the effective adaptation of the Company's TBA Program are a part of the regularly assigned duties of all of The Texas Company's field personnel who normally contact Dealers, or Consignees, or distributors. The Company's selling personnel are expected to become familiar with the Firestone and Goodrich Suggested Basic Stock Assortment and Inventory Guide System and the merchandising of TBA Products generally. It should be clearly understood, however, that assistance will also be rendered by TEXACO personnel to all Dealers in setting up their own Basic Stock Assortment and Inventory Guide System regardless of the brand of merchandise handled.

It should be further understood by all concerned that the activities of The Texas Company's personnel in carrying out its TBA Program must be considered as an addition to the efforts or activities of the TBA suppliers' selling personnel and not in lieu thereof.

12. The importance of respecting the independence of the TEXACO Dealer and his right to exercise his free and independent judgment with respect to the brand of TBA Merchandise he will handle, and the quantities he will purchase, cannot be over-emphasized. Insofar as The Texas Company is concerned, no TBA supplier shall be preferred over any other as to any territory or portion thereof.

TBA PROGRAM
STATEMENT OF POLICY

CIRCULAR LETTER NO. [illegible]

Messrs: J. A. Sanders
R. D. Parker
J. W. Brown
H. B. Riley

Gentlemen:

This letter replaces and cancels Circular Letter No. 509 of January 2, 1948, under the above subject. It does not introduce any change in our policy of long standing, but is intended to:

A. Assist our personnel in presenting the merits of the Program to Dealers by stating the reasons for recommending Firestone or Goodrich as a supplier.

B. Define Division Management's responsibilities in administering the TBA Program.

C. Outline the duties and responsibilities of field personnel charged with carrying out the Program in the field.

I. WHAT THE TEXAS COMPANY'S TBA PROGRAM IS:

The aim of the Company's TBA Program is to encourage Dealers to expand their business beyond the sale of Petroleum Products; and to counsel with and continually assist TEXACO Dealers to establish and maintain superior service to their customers, maintain an adequate and balanced stock of fast-moving TBA items and to improve their methods of merchandising so that they will be able to take full advantage of the profit potentials available to them through good Service Station operations.

Accordingly, The Texas Company recommends that its Dealers handle Firestone or Goodrich. However, notwithstanding the fact that the Company recommends to its Dealers these certain lines of TBA merchandise, it should be clearly understood by all concerned that the Company has neither the right

nor the desire to dictate to the Dealer the brand or type of merchandise he should handle, or the source from which he should purchase such merchandise, or to require him to handle any TBA Merchandise.

II. WHY FIRESTONE AND GOODRICH LINES WERE SELECTED FOR RECOMMENDATION TO TEXACO DEALERS

The TBA merchandise lines and merchandising policies of both Firestone and Goodrich offer many advantages to the Dealers, including a complete line of high quality automotive products to meet practically all the needs of the motorist. Firestone and Goodrich products have national acceptance, backed by extensive national advertising, and are distributed in all 48 States, with sales and delivery service available through 1,266 salary operated supply points and numerous Dealer operated stores carrying the complete line.

Another advantage of handling these lines is that the Dealer can purchase his entire TBA requirements from one source, conveniently located, thus earning extra discounts through volume purchases. Both Firestone and Goodrich have extensive sales promotion programs designed expressly to fit the needs of their Service Station accounts. Point-of-sale promotional material and cooperative advertising are available on a low-cost or no-cost basis. They also have a large sales force fully trained to assist the Service Station Dealers to make the most of their TBA opportunities.

All these factors tend to increase the salability of Firestone and Goodrich products, and thus increase the profits of the Dealers handling such lines.

III. RESPONSIBILITIES OF DIVISION MANAGEMENT IN ADMINISTERING THE TBA PROGRAM

The proper administration of The Texas Company's TBA Program in the field is the direct responsibility of Division Management. They should see to it that each member of the field organization who normally contacts Dealers, Consignees and Distributors:

(1) Understands that even though The Texas Company does not handle tires, batteries and auto supplies, it recognizes the advantages to be derived by the Dealer from the handling of such merchandise and the necessity for the Dealer to do so in order to be competitive, meet the requirements of his customers, and enjoy more profitable operations.

(2) Becomes familiar with the lines and basic sales policies and promotional and merchandising programs of Firestone and Goodrich, including their Suggested Basic Stock Assortment and Inventory Guide systems.

(3) Handles assigned duties outlined in Section IV.

IV. DUTIES OF TEXACO SALES PERSONNEL CHARGED WITH HANDLING TBA PROGRAM IN THE FIELD

Listed below are the responsibilities and activities which are part of the regularly assigned duties of selling personnel who normally contact Dealers, Consignees or Distributors:

(1) Present the merits of our TBA Program, recommending the products of Firestone or Goodrich if best suited to the Dealer's interest.

(2) Recommendations with respect to TBA merchandise made by a TEXACO representative to a TEXACO dealer should in the best interest of the Dealer take into consideration the following factors:

(a) The Dealer's requirements based on an analysis of the potential volume available within the Dealer's specific trading area;

(b) The availability of a convenient source of supply and the frequency of contact and type of service to be afforded the Dealer by a wholesale supplier, as well as the supplier's ability and willingness to assist the Dealer to be competitive in the market at all times;

(c) The established representation of the tire company in the area.

DOCKET 6112 — 205 E-F

(3) If, after a straightforward sales presentation of the Company's TBA Program, and a full explanation of the merits of such Program, the Dealer should in exercising his free choice of a brand of TBA merchandise express his preference for the Goodrich or Firestone line, the TEXACO representative should promptly arrange to introduce to him a sales representative of the supplier chosen by the Dealer. It should be recognized at all times that the negotiations between the Dealer and the Tire Company representative, and any purchase arrangements resulting therefrom, are matters for their mutual consideration. The TEXACO representative, however, should be prepared and willing to lend any advice and counsel that may be requested of him by the Dealer during such negotiations.

(4) In an effort to help Dealers expand and develop their business, the Company urges them to stock an adequate amount of TBA merchandise to serve fully the motorists' needs. TEXACO selling personnel, with the Dealers approval, will assist in the physical installation of an "Inventory Guide System", and continue to assist in the maintenance until its use is habitual with the Dealer, regardless of the brand chosen by the Dealer. The Firestone or Goodrich "Suggested Basic Stock Assortment and Inventory Guide System" is considered among the simplest methods available to assure the maintenance of a well-balance stock of fast moving TBA merchandise, and Dealers should be advised of this and urged to consider its installation and use.

(5) Similar guidance and assistance should be offered in the use and maintenance of TBA display programs, and Dealers should be urged to utilize all appropriate space available to them in building displays that will attract customers and increase sales.

(6) The Company's sales personnel should be sufficiently alert at each visit to a Service Station to call the Dealer's attention to their willingness to aid him by actually writing up the Dealer's order for Goodrich or Firestone [illegible]. As a further assistance to the Dealer, TEXACO personnel should personally mail or deliver such orders to the Dealer's source of supply. Orders should be written on the forms furnished by Firestone and Goodrich and carried by TEXACO personnel at all times.

(7) Although reference is made hereinbefore to Dealers, it should be understood that every phase of the Program is applicable to TBA Programs of Consignees and Distributors. Equal effort should be made by the Company's personnel to sell Consignees and Distributors on the merits of the Program and the benefits to be derived by adopting it for their own use and wholeheartedly encouraging the Dealers they serve to use it.

The importance of respecting the independence of the TEXACO Dealer and his right to exercise his free and independent judgment with respect to the brand of TBA merchandise he will handle, and the quantities he will purchase, cannot be over-emphasized. Insofar as The Texas Company is concerned, no TBA supplier shall be preferred over any other as to any territory or portion thereof.

The success of the TBA Program depends upon the kind of a selling job that is done. The principles of the TEXACO Selling Method are sound and appropriate, and should be applied as wholeheartedly in handling this Program as in all other sales efforts.

Yours very truly,

(4) Any recommendation with respect to brand of TBA merchandise made by the Texaco representative should be predicated on the availability of a convenient source of supply, the frequency of contact and the type of service to be afforded the dealer by the wholesale supplier. A major factor would be the supplier's ability and willingness to assist the dealer to be competitive in the market at all times. The established representation of the tire company in the area should also be taken into consideration.

(5) If, after a straightforward sales presentation of the Company's TBA program, and a full explanation of the merits of such program, the dealer should in exercising his free choice of a brand of TBA merchandise express his preference for the Goodrich or Firestone line, the Texaco representative should personally endeavor to introduce to him a sales representative of the supplier chosen by the dealer. It should be recognized at all times that the negotiations between the dealer and the tire company representative, and any purchase arrangements resulting therefrom, are matters for their mutual consideration. The Texaco representative, however, should be prepared and willing to lend any advice and counsel that may be requested of him by the dealer during such negotiations.

(6) The Firestone or Goodrich "Suggested Basic Stock Assortment and Inventory Guide System" is considered among the important marketing facilities to assure the maintenance of a well-balanced stock of fast-moving TBA merchandise. The Texaco representative should explain to the dealer the complete functions of the "Inventory Guide" and urge the dealer to consider its installation and use. Inasmuch as it is consistent with good business management to maintain proper and adequate inventories, it should be explained to the dealer that this type of Guide can be of much value to him in effecting sales and in making it easier for him to keep only the merchandise needed. Texaco selling personnel should not only assist in the physical installation of the Inventory Guide System, but should continue to assist the dealer in the maintenance of the Guide until its use by the dealer becomes established routine in his everyday operation.

(7) It has been said that merchandise well displayed is half sold. Eye-catching displays of TBA products at service stations, like petroleum product displays, can be of greatest value to dealers in increasing their sales and profits. It is also important that the prices be prominently shown on all TBA merchandise displayed and that the merchandise be kept in a clean and orderly arrangement. To help attract more customers and make more sales, both Firestone and Goodrich make available to dealers an inexpensive printing kit as well as display packages containing up-to-date and attractive point-of-sale material.

Texaco representatives should urge dealers to take full advantage of the tire company's offer of assistance in improving their station's "sparkle" with displays that present an attractive appearance. The Company's sales personnel should assist dealers in utilizing all appropriate space available to them for building displays that will attract customers and increase sales.

(8) The regular order forms furnished by Firestone and Goodrich are to be carried by Texaco selling personnel at all times. At each visit to a service station, the Company's sales personnel should call the dealer's attention to the fact that as a further assistance to him in keeping his desired inventory balanced, he will write up the dealer's order for the Goodrich or Firestone merchandise that is needed. Texaco personnel should personally mail or deliver such orders to the dealer's source of supply.

(9) Holders of The Texas Company's National Credit Cards are privileged to purchase Firestone or Goodrich TBA merchandise from Texaco dealers on their regular 30-day account, or, may, when desired, extend their payments for such merchandise over a period up to 6 months. If properly promoted by the dealer, this Texaco Deferred Payment Plan can be of material assistance to him in increasing his sales and profits without the necessity of tieing up the dealer's working capital for accounts receivable. The Company's selling personnel should urge dealers to take full advantage of this dealer aid for the convenience of their customers, which is available without cost. The Texaco representative should also make sure that the dealer understands the proper handling of customer charges for TBA merchandise on The Texas Company's Deferred Payment Plan.

(10) Although reference is made heretofore to dealers, it should be understood that every phase of the TBA program is adaptable to TBA programs of consignees and distributors. Equal effort should be made by the Company's personnel to sell consignees and distributors on the merits of the program as a means of developing their dealers, and the benefits to be derived by adopting it for their own use.

The principles of the Texaco Selling Method are sound and appropriate and should be applied wholeheartedly by The Texas Company's selling personnel when selling the merits of or handling any phase of the Company's TBA program. The success of the TBA program depends upon the kind of selling job that is done. The handling of the TBA program with dealers is an important part of the regularly assigned duties of the Company's selling personnel. Nevertheless, the importance of respecting the independence of the Texaco dealer and his right to exercise his free and independent judgment on all matters and all phases of his business cannot be overemphasized.

A. Assist our personnel in presenting the merits of the program to dealers by stating the reasons for recommending Firestone or Goodrich as a supplier.

B. Define Division Management's responsibilities in administering the TBA program.

C. Outline the duties and responsibilities of field personnel charged with carrying out the program in the field.

I. WHAT THE TEXAS COMPANY'S TBA PROGRAM IS

The aim of the Company's TBA program is to encourage dealers to expand their business beyond the sale of petroleum products; and to counsel with and continually assist Texaco dealers to establish and maintain superior service to their customers, maintain an adequate and balanced stock of fast-moving TBA items and to improve their methods of merchandising so that they will be able to take full advantage of the profit potentials available to them through good service station operations.

Accordingly, The Texas Company recommends that its dealers handle Firestone or Goodrich. However, notwithstanding the fact that the Company recommends to its dealers these certain lines of TBA merchandise, it should be clearly understood by all concerned that the Company has neither the right nor the desire to dictate to the dealer the brand or type of merchandise he should handle, or the source from which he should purchase such merchandise, or to require him to handle any TBA merchandise.

II. WHY FIRESTONE AND GOODRICH LINES WERE SELECTED FOR RECOMMENDATION TO TEXACO DEALERS

The TBA merchandise lines and merchandising policies of both Firestone and Goodrich offer many advantages to the dealers, including a complete line of high quality automotive products to meet practically all the needs of the motorist. Firestone and Goodrich products have national acceptance, backed by extensive national advertising, and are distributed in all 48 states, with sales and delivery service available through 1,286 salary operated supply points and numerous dealer operated stores carrying the complete line.

Another advantage of handling these lines is that the dealer can purchase his entire TBA requirements from one source, conveniently located, thus earning extra discounts through volume purchases. Both Firestone and Goodrich have extensive sales promotion programs designed expressly to fit the needs of their service station accounts. Point-of-sale promotional material and cooperative advertising are available on a low-cost or no-cost basis. They also have a large sales force fully trained to assist the service station dealers to make the most of their TBA opportunities.

All these factors tend to increase the saleability of Firestone and Goodrich products, and thus increase the profits of the dealers handling such lines.

III. RESPONSIBILITIES OF DIVISION MANAGEMENT IN ADMINISTERING THE TBA PROGRAM

The proper administration of The Texas Company's TBA program in the field is the direct responsibility of Division Management. They should see to it that each member of the field organization who normally contacts dealers, consignees and distributors:

(1) Understands that even though The Texas Company does not handle tires, batteries and auto supplies, it recognizes the advantages to be derived by the dealer from the handling of such merchandise and the necessity for the dealer to do so in order to be competitive, meet the requirements of his customers, and enjoy more profitable operations.

(2) Becomes familiar with the lines and basic sales policies and promotional and merchandising programs of Firestone and Goodrich, including their Suggested Basic Stock Assortment and Inventory Guide Systems.

(3) Handles assigned duties outlined in Section IV.

IV. DUTIES OF TEXACO SALES PERSONNEL CHARGED WITH HANDLING TBA PROGRAM IN THE FIELD

Listed below are the responsibilities and activities which are part of the regularly assigned duties of selling personnel who normally contact dealers, consignees or distributors:

(1) Present the merits of our TBA program, recommending the products of Firestone or Goodrich if best suited to the dealer's interest.

(2) Recommendations with respect to TBA merchandise made by a Texaco representative to a Texaco dealer should in the best interest of the dealer take into consideration the following factors:

(a) The dealer's requirements based on an analysis of the potential volume available within the dealer's specific trading area;

(b) The availability of a convenient source of supply and the frequency of contact and type of service to be afforded the dealer by a wholesale supplier, as well as the supplier's ability and willingness to assist the dealer to be competitive in the market at all times;

(c) The established representation of the tire company in the area.

(3) If, after a straightforward sales presentation of the Company's TBA program, and a full explanation of the merits of such program, the dealer should in exercising his free choice of a brand of TBA merchandise express his preference for the Goodrich or Firestone line, the Texaco representative should promptly arrange to introduce to him a sales representative of the supplier chosen by the dealer. It should be recognized at all times that the negotiations between the dealer and the tire company representative, and any purchase arrangements resulting therefrom, are matters for their mutual consideration. The Texaco representative, however, should be prepared and willing to lend any advice and counsel that may be requested of him by the dealer during such negotiations.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION
DOCKET NO. 6181 EXHIBIT NO. 31-D

(4) In an effort to help dealers expand and develop their business, the Company urges them to stock an adequate amount of TBA merchandise to serve fully the motorists' needs. Texaco selling personnel, with the dealers approval, will assist in the physical installation of an "Inventory Guide System", and continue to assist in the maintenance until its use is habitual with the dealer, regardless of the brand chosen by the dealer. The Firestone or Goodrich "Suggested Basic Stock Assortment and Inventory Guide System" is considered among the simplest methods available to assure the maintenance of a well-balanced stock of fast-moving TBA merchandise, and dealers should be advised of this and urged to consider its installation and use.

(5) Similar guidance and assistance should be offered in the use and maintenance of TBA display programs, and dealers should be urged to utilize all appropriate space available to them in building displays that will attract customers and increase sales.

(6) The Company's sales personnel should be sufficiently alert at each visit to a service station to call the dealer's attention to their willingness to aid him by actually writing up the dealer's order for Goodrich or Firestone merchandise. As a further assistance to the dealer, Texaco personnel should personally mail or deliver such orders to the dealer's source of supply. Orders should be written on the forms furnished by Firestone and Goodrich and carried by Texaco personnel at all times.

(7) Although reference is made heretofore to dealers, it should be understood that every phase of the program is adaptable to TBA programs of consignees and distributors. Equal effort should be made by the Company's personnel to sell consignees and distributors on the merits of the program and the benefits to be derived by adopting it for their own use and wholeheartedly encouraging the dealers they serve to use it.

The importance of respecting the independence of the Texaco dealer and his right to exercise his free and independent judgment with respect to the brand of TBA merchandise he will handle, and the quantities he will purchase, cannot be overemphasized. Insofar as The Texas Company is concerned, no TBA supplier shall be preferred over any other as to any territory or portion thereof.

The success of the TBA Program depends upon the kind of a selling job that is done. The principles of the Texaco Selling Method are sound and appropriate, and should be applied as wholeheartedly in handling this program as in all other sales efforts.

The success you will attain depends entirely upon the time and effort you put into the program and the cooperation you give and receive from the rubber company representatives. THE TEXAS COMPANY'S TBA PROGRAM

In order to remind our selling organizations of the merits of The Texas Company's long standing TBA Program and to outline the duties and responsibilities of field personnel charged with carrying out this program, it is felt desirable to review fully herein the Company's policy with regard thereto. It is intended that these sheets be added to each salesman's portfolio "Outside Services For Texaco Dealers" and be made a part thereof, so that every salesman will at all times have with him the full explanation of the Company's TBA Policy and the detailed instructions as to how the selling organization should function under this program.

I. WHY THE TEXAS COMPANY HAS A TBA PROGRAM

It is recognized that most service station dealers cannot successfully train and retain regular customers and reap full profits from their operations if only petroleum products are handled. Statistics prove that the average automobile owner purchases by far the greater portion of his supplies and service during the automotive necessities short of major repairs. These necessities, commonly known in the industry as TBA merchandise, include tires, batteries, and other sundry items, all of which must be carried in stock by service station dealers, plus many of the items of automotive equipment normally handled by most successful service station dealers, plus many of the items of accessory items.

The purpose of the Company's TBA program, therefore, is to encourage dealers to expand their business beyond the sale of petroleum products. To accomplish this, Texaco selling personnel should counsel with and continually assist Texaco dealers to establish and maintain necessary service to their customers, maintain an adequate and balanced stock of fast-moving TBA items and to improve their methods of merchandising so that they will be able to take full advantage of the profit potentials available to them through good service station operations.

II. WHY FIRESTONE AND GOODRICH LINES WERE SELECTED FOR RECOMMENDATION TO TEXACO DEALERS

The Texas Company believes that the TBA merchandise lines and merchandising policies of both Firestone and Goodrich offer many advantages to Texaco dealers, including a complete line of high quality automotive products to meet practically all the needs of the motorist. Firestone and Goodrich products have national acceptance, backed by extensive national advertising, and are distributed in all 48 states, with sales and delivery service available through more than 1,000 salary-operated supply points and numerous dealer operated stores which carry the complete line.

Another advantage of handling Firestone or Goodrich products is that the dealer can purchase his entire TBA requirements from one source, conveniently located, thus earning extra discounts through volume purchases. Both Firestone and Goodrich have extensive sales promotional programs designed expressly to fit the needs of their service station accounts. Point-of-Sale promotional material and cooperative advertising are available on a low-cost or no-cost basis. They also have large sales forces fully trained to assist the service station dealers to make the most of their TBA opportunities.

All these factors tend to increase the saleability of Firestone and Goodrich products, and thus increase the profits of dealers handling such lines. Accordingly, The Texas Company recommends that its dealers handle Firestone or Goodrich merchandise.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Company recommends to its dealers certain lines of TBA merchandise, it should be clearly understood by all concerned that the Company has neither the right nor the desire to dictate to the dealer the brand or type of merchandise he should handle, or the source from which he should purchase such merchandise, or to require him to handle any TBA merchandise.

III. DUTIES OF TEXACO SALES PERSONNEL

(1) Each member of the field organization who normally contacts dealers, consignees, and distributors should clearly understand that even though The Texas Company does not handle tires, batteries, and auto supplies, it recognizes the advantages to be derived by the dealer from the handling of such merchandise and the necessity for the dealer to do so in order to be competitive, meet the requirements of his customers and enjoy more profitable operations.

(2) In order to present the merits of The Texaco TBA Program all selling personnel should be thoroughly familiar with the lines, the basic sales policies, the promotional programs and the merchandising programs of both Firestone and Goodrich, including establishment and maintenance of their "Suggested Basic Stock Assortment, and Inventory Guide Systems."

(3) Before making definite recommendations with respect to TBA merchandise to a Texaco dealer, the Texaco representative should assist the dealer in analyzing the potential volume of TBA business that the dealer can reasonably expect within his specific trading area, and help him to arrive at a basic minimum inventory that should permit adequate service of his particular market.

One of the important responsibilities of Texaco sales personnel is that they should continually be in position to advise dealers of forthcoming Firestone or Goodrich promotional programs so that the dealer can take advantage of every opportunity to increase his profits and be more competitive.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION
DOCKET 6[illegible]
RESPONDENT EXHIBIT NO. [illegible]

(4) Any recommendation with respect to brand of TBA merchandise made by the Texaco representative should be predicated on the availability of a convenient source of supply, the frequency of contact and the type of service to be afforded the dealer by the wholesale supplier. A further factor should be the supplier's ability and willingness to assist the dealer to be competitive in the sale of TBA merchandise. The established representation of the tire company in the area should also be considered.

(5) If, after a thorough and [illegible] explanation of the Company's TBA program, and a full explanation of the merits of each program, the dealer should in preference buy TBA merchandise supplied by the Goodrich or Firestone distributor, he should promptly arrange to [illegible] It should be recognized at all times that the [illegible] sentative, and any purchase arrangements [illegible] tion. (7) It has been said that merchandise well displayed is half sold. The [illegible] of TBA products at service stations, like petroleum product displays, can be of material value to dealers in increasing their sales and profits. It is also important that the price be prominently shown on all TBA merchandise displayed and that the merchandise be kept in a clean and orderly arrangement. To help attract more customers and make more sales, both Firestone and Goodrich make available [illegible] penalve pricing kit as well as display packages containing up-to-date and [illegible]

Texaco representatives should urge dealers to take full advantage of the tire company's offer of assistance in improving their station's "sparkle" with displays that present an attractive appearance. The Company's selling personnel should assist dealers in utilizing all appropriate space available in them for building displays that will attract customers and increase sales.

(8) The regular order forms furnished by Firestone and Goodrich are to be carried by Texaco selling personnel at all times. At each visit to a service station, the Company's sales personnel should call the dealer's attention to the fact that as a further assistance to him in keeping his desired inventory balance, he will write up the dealer's order for the Goodrich or Firestone merchandise that is needed. Texaco personnel should personally mail or deliver such orders to the dealer's source of supply.

(9) Holders of The Texas Company's National Credit Cards are privileged to purchase Firestone or Goodrich TBA merchandise from Texaco dealers on their regular 30-day account, or may, when desired, extend their payments for such merchandise over a period up to 6 months. If properly presented by the dealer, this Texaco Deferred Payment Plan can be of material assistance to him in increasing his sales and profits without the necessity of tieing up the dealer's working capital for accounts receivable. The Company's selling personnel should urge dealers to take full advantage of this dealer aid for the convenience of their customers, which is available without cost. The Texaco representative should also make sure that the dealer understands the proper handling of customer charges for TBA merchandise on The Texas Company's Deferred Payment Plan.

(10) Although reference is made hereinbefore to dealers, it should be understood that every phase of the TBA program is adaptable to TBA programs of consignees and distributors. Equal effort should be made by the Company's personnel to sell consignees and distributors on the merits of the program as a means of developing their dealers, and the benefits to be derived by adopting it for their own use.

The principles of the Texaco Selling Method are sound and appropriate and should be applied wholeheartedly by The Texas Company's selling personnel when selling the merits of or handling any phase of the Company's TBA program. The success of the TBA program depends upon the kind of selling job that is done. The handling of the TBA program with dealers is an important part of the regularly assigned duties of the Company's selling personnel. Nevertheless, the importance of respecting the independence of the Texaco dealer and his right to exercise his free and independent judgment on all matters and all phases of his business cannot be overemphasized.

Texas Group Establishes Units in Over 100 Towns

BROWNWOOD, Texas—Since it received its charter on August 28, 1949, with 52 Brown County charter members, the Texas Service Station Association has grown to a state-wide organization with local units in more than 100 towns and cities, the association stated following its second annual directors meeting.

"During that two-year period," stated the association, "with one full-time field man and another less than half time, it has established local units in more than one hundred cities and towns, from Dalhart and Perryton to Brownsville, and from Odessa to Orange. It is in 15 of the 21 congressional districts, with thousands of members.

Bob Fulgham of Fort Worth was elected president of the association at the annual meeting. Other officers elected were: Ray J. Schweers, San Antonio, first vice president; Raymond Baker, Brownwood, second vice president, and Howard E. Harlowe, Brownwood, secretary-treasurer.

Also elected were 21 directors, one from each congressional district where the association has membership and six directors at large. The bylaws provide that until the organization is established in each congressional district, directors at large shall be chosen from the county of the home office, but as it is established in a new congressional district one director at large shall resign and his place be filled by a director from the new district.

Directors elected were: Bob Kavanaugh, Port Author; E. B. Yale, Tyler; Lawrence Miller, Galveston; O. M. Branyon, Austin; Ronald Copeland, Waco; Dick Knight, Fort Worth; Bob Biggs, Wichita Falls; Royal Bates, Alice; H. O. Wilson, San Benito; W. G. Keeler, Midland; Bill Stockton, Abilene; Lloyd Kuntz, Pampa; Glen Woody Lubbock; Ray Schweers, San Antonio, and Odis Cox, Brady.

Directors at large, all from Brownwood, elected were: L. A. C. York, W. R. Curbo, Guy Keeler, E. O. Petross; E. W. Vardman, and Howard E. Harlowe.

Lottery Laws Thwart Opening Day Prizes

SIKESTON, Mo. — Plans to give away product price during the grand opening of Jay and Jim's "66" Service Station in this area on Route 66 had to be cancelled because of state lottery laws, but opening-day customers came in for a real bargain anyhow.

To get town-people acquainted with the new station the owners gave motorists a lubrication job with a purchase of $2 or more during the outlet's grand opening.

Station Changes Hands

ULYSSES, Kan. — Virgil Deal, owner of the Deal Service Station here, has sold his business to the Smith-Craig Motors firm of Liberal, Kan. The new owners have placed Chet Hockensmith in charge as manager of the local station which carries a complete line of Texaco products, and offers service and parts for cars.

SELL IT ← THROUGH A SMALL CLASSIFIED ADVERTISEMENT IN THE GASOLINE RETAILER

"Like the Auto-Lite salesman says . . . Ignition Engineered Auto-Lite Spark Plugs are a complete line for maximum profits. Since taking on the line I've found that's true. Believe me, it's a great line and a great deal."

RAY W. TOSCH
8315 Preston Rd., Dallas, Texas

"Everywhere I go I see Auto-Lite Spark Plug advertising—in newspapers, magazines, on the radio and even television. That's the kind of backing a dealer likes to get—the kind that really helps him sell."

ROBERT W. MILLER
10324 Burbank Blvd., No. Hollywood, Calif.

Packard says . . .

"AUTO-LITE SPARK PLUGS are the best ever!"

"There's real advanced engineering behind the Auto-Lite Spark Plug line. Take the Resistor plug, for instance. It's been proven right and it's still unmatched in the industry."

EDDIE MEYER

"Auto-Lite Spark Plugs are tops in quality. My customers like 'em, I like 'em and automotive engineers must like 'em, too. They put 'em in as original equipment. That makes Auto-Lite easy to sell."

ANALYSIS OF TIRE AND TUBE SALES
THE TEXAS COMPANY AND THE CONTINENTAL OIL COMPANY
YEARS 1954, 1955, 1956, 1957

Oil company distributor and service station accounts are carried on The B.F.Goodrich Company Factory books, Zone books, B.F.Goodrich Store books and independent B.F. Goodrich dealer books. Summaries of accounts carried by B.F.Goodrich Store and independent B.F.Goodrich dealers and sent to Akron show the total tire and tube business without detail as to type, i.e., passenger or non-passenger. On the other hand, copies of the individual invoices to distributors and service stations carried on B.F.Goodrich Factory and Zone books are sent to Akron Sales Accounting Department. These invoices are keypunched as to customer number and class of merchandise and the figures below represent an analysis of this business:

Column 1 - TBA sales for 1952-1955 shown in Exhibits CX114 and CX118. For prior years, Goodrich data from CX138 and Firestone data from CX115-in-Docket Number 6487.

Column 2 - First step in deflating total TBA involved breaking down total current dollar TBA into the following categories: tires and tubes, batteries, all other accessories. These three categories were then deflated by appropriate components (see Table II for explanation of deflation techniques and data) of the Bureau of Labor Statistics Wholesale Price Index. Actual data for tires and tubes available for entire period. Actual data for batteries and for other accessories not available prior to 1955. Sales of batteries for years 1948-1954 were estimated by assuming the average of 1955-1953 ratio of batteries to total TBA applied to earlier years. For period 1948-1954 other accessories is the residual obtained by deducting tires and tubes and batteries from total TBA. Column 2, then, represents the sum of the deflated data for (1) tires and tubes, (2) batteries, and (3) other accessories.

Column 1 - Data for 1951-1955 shown in Exhibit CX1130 and CX1131. For years 1946-1950 data obtained from Texaco Sales Department, Form S-1913.

Column 2 - The technique and price indexes used to convert current dollar TBA sales, shown in Column 1 this table, to a constant 1948 dollar basis are identical with those used to deflate total TBA sales by Goodrich and Firestone combined to all Texaco stations and distributors. See note to Column 2 of Table I and Table II, including notes, for explanation of technique and appropriate price indexes used in deflating.

Column 3 - "C" account gasoline sales for 1952-55 from Exhibit CX1131, which shows gasoline sales in barrels. Figures converted to gallons by Economics Department. For years 1946-51 from Annual Report of Texaco Sales Department.

Column 4 - Obtained by dividing current dollar TBA (Column 1) by thousands of gallons of gasoline sales (Column 3).

Column 5 - Obtained by dividing constant dollar TBA (Column 2) by thousands of gallons of gasoline sales (Column 3).

3. For the year 1954 the Department of Commerce estimated sales were 6.554% higher than the actual sales reported by the Bureau of the Census of the same Department. In order to adjust the Department of Commerce estimated sales to the Census benchmark data, the adjustment factor of 106.554% which was computed for the year 1954 was used.

1. Consist of simple averages of first-of-month prices in 50 representative U. S. cities and include gasoline taxes in order to make the data comparable with those reported by the U. S. Census of Business in which the sales of gasoline service stations include all such taxes. For the years 1954 and 1955, from Petroleum Facts and Figures, Twelfth Edition 1956 (published by American Petroleum Institute), p. 309; for the year 1956 from National Petroleum News Factbook (A McGraw-Hill Publication) Mid-May 1957-58, page 187. The same prices, but exclusive of taxes, are published in Business Statistics, 1957 Biennial Edition, A Supplement to the Survey of Current Business, U. S. Department of Commerce, p. 174.
2. Data in Table 2A, Col. 3, subtracted from 100.
3. Weight used in computing the weighted average price is based on a weight of 1.000 for premium gasoline. Computed by dividing the per cent of total gallonage for regular gasoline by the corresponding per cent for premium gasoline. Thus, for 1954, 68.8 divided by 31.2 = 2.205.
4. Based on information for price differentials between regular and premium grades of gasoline obtained through independent research.
5. Weighted average price for all gasoline sold by gasoline service stations. Computed by multiplying the price for each grade by the corresponding weight, adding the totals, and dividing the overall total by the sum of weights. Thus, for 1954, $0.2904 times 2.205 plus $0.3204 times 1 = $0.9607, divided by 3.205 (2.205 plus 1) = $0.2998.

Computed Per Cent of Premium Automotive Gasoline to Total Gallonage of Automotive Gasoline Sold by Retail Outlets Including Gasoline Service Stations: 1954-1956

Year	Estimated Reseller Volume of Non-Premium Gasoline*	Adjusted Total Automotive Gasoline Sales	Adjusted Premium, Per Cent of Total
1954	23,952,866	38,409,944	37.6
1955	25,567,666	41,184,780	37.9
1956	26,476,106	43,010,857	38.4

* Estimated reseller volume at 75% of total non-premium gasoline shown in Col. 3 of main table above. This estimate was arrived at, on an extremely conservative basis, in the light of the following data. First, gasoline consumption by motor trucks and buses were computed to be 27.0% of total consumption by U. S. motor vehicles in 1954 and 26.4% in 1955 (from data in Petroleum Facts and Figures, Twelfth Edition, 1956, published by American Petroleum Institute, page 82). Motor trucks and buses, with few exceptions, use non-premium or regular grade gasoline and they purchase about one-half direct. Second, direct purchases of substantial quantities of non-premium gasoline are made for a number of other purposes, a few of which are given here like those made by Class I railroads (46,815,258 gallons in 1954 and 47,756,016 gallons in 1955, Ibid., page 93); for farm consumption (6,775,000,000 gallons in 1953, Ibid., page 84); by the U. S. Army for use in continental United States (123,858,000 gallons in 1954 and 116,411,400 gallons in 1955, Ibid., page 96). In the light of this, it is clear that the Ethyl percentages used are an irreducible minimum in order to avoid resort to incomplete and fragmentary data for the making of more relevant but inaccurate computations.

1. From Table 1, Column 4.
2. In 1948 the ratio of gasoline sales to total sales of gasoline service stations was 70.3% (Census of Business: 1948, Volume II, p. 21.02). The remaining 29.7% of the total sales was made up of the sale of lubricants (6.8%), fuel oil (2.0%); services like washing and greasing (5.4%); tires, batteries and accessories (9.1%), and all other sales and services (6.4%).

   According to the Bureau of the Census, the 1948 gasoline sales ratio "was a reduction from the proportion of such sales in 1939, when gasoline accounted for 75 percent of the sales of gasoline service stations with sales of $20,000 or more each, and 77 percent of the sales of smaller stations." (Census of Business: 1948, Volume II, Retail Trade--General Statistics, Part 2, p. 35). On the basis of this information from the most authoritative source available it was concluded that the proportion of gasoline sales to total sales of gasoline service stations would probably decline at the rate of .5% of total sales annually, which would make this percentage 3 points lower in 1954 - the next Census year for which no such data were collected.

S. Government Printing Office, Washington: 1957,) on a comparable basis showed 179,647 service stations for 1948 and 181,747 stations for 1954--an increase of 2,100 stations. Assuming the increase to be constant, it would mean a net addition at the rate of 350 stations per year, thus making the number of stations 350 higher in 1955 than the actual figure shown by the Census for 1954 and by another increment of 350 stations for 1956. 2. In connection with the 1948 Census of Retail Trade, 77.5% of the business volume reported by gasoline service establishments and business other than commodities or merchandise lines. In this breakdown were included sales of $258,525,000 in tires (new and used) and $111,337,000 in accessories and accessories. (United States Census of Business: 1948, Volume II, p. 21.02). When adjusted for the 8.5% of the volume that was not known how to merchandise line, on the assumption that the 77.5% of the volume was certainly representative of the total, the sales of tires (new and used) amounted to $273,020,518 and of batteries and accessories they were $117,618,000, with a total TBA volume of $615,653,332. In terms of station cost, total TBA sales, based on an average gross margin of 29% of selling price, amounted to $437,113,866 ($615,653,332 x 71%) and sales of tires and tubes, based on an average gross margin of 26% of selling price, amounted to ($273,020,518 x 74%). This means that sales of tires and tubes, $201,979 were 42.83% of total domestic replacement passenger car tire and tube sales in 1948 (41,895,434 tires as shown in Automotive News 1949 Almanac, at $10.34 per tire as shown in Col. 5 of Table 5, [illegible] Almanac at $1.66 per tube as shown in Col. 5 of Table 5, or [illegible] of the $476,539,180).

1. From Table 3, last column.
2. In connection with the land values of Retail Trade, 97.3% of the business volume reported by Specialty service establishments was driven down by commissions or merchandising allure. In this breakdown were included sales of $250,000,000 in tires (new and used) and $121,321,000 in batteries and accessories. (United States Census of Business: 1948; Volume II, p.21.00).
3. Based on data for the volume that was not broken down by merchandise line, on the assumption that the 97.3% of the volume was certainly representative of the total, the sales of tires (new and used)accounted for $272,840,312 and of batteries and accessories they were $115,912,820, with a total TEA volume of $615,691,132. In terms of selling cost, total TEA sales, based on an average gross margin of 40% of selling price, amounted to $317,113,560 (($615,691,132 x 72%) and sales of tires and tubes, based on an average gross margin of 36% of selling price, amounted to $250,107,179 ($272,840,312 x 72%). This means that sales of tires and tubes, at cost, were 42.3% of total domestic replacement passenger car tire and tube sales in 1948 ($41,295,4.3- tires as shown in Automotive News 1954 Almanac at $16.19 per tire as shown in Col. 3 of Table 3, plus 34,021,3.7- tubes shown in the Almanac at $1.66 per tube as shown in Col. 5 of Table 3, or a total of $47,316,730).

3. Computed by subtracting from the data in Col. 2 the difference between the data in Col. 1 for the current year then those for the preceding year.
4. Computed by adding to the number for the preceding year the additional stations formed from a computation based on the assumption, first that 60.7% of the establishments combined Tires and Tubes and 70.1% of them handled Batteries and Accessories--the same proportion as obtained for all service stations in 1948--and, second, that 97% of the newly established stations would be handling the products.
Starting with 178,847 service stations in 1954 as per Census figures and allowing an annual net addition of 350 stations, and using data for some previous years (1,000 in 1953, 1,000 in 1952, 1,000 in 1951, 1,000 in 1950, 1,000 in 1949, and 1,000 in 1948) to estimate the number of stations handling tires and tubes and those handling batteries and accessories, respectively, for each of the years until the 1954 Census figure of 126,255 and 135,491 stations handling Tires and Tubes and Batteries and Accessories, respectively, were obtained. To each of the years until the 1956 Census figure of 131,705 and 141,186 stations handling Tires and Tubes and Batteries and Accessories, 185,255 stations handling these and taking out 130,797 stations handling Tires and Tubes and 140,550 stations handling Batteries and Accessories.

Dear Mr. Payne:

I realize now that what I did wrong I wrote [redacted] on the statement which was [redacted] that Mr. [redacted] and I had traded [redacted] but we [redacted] and I have never had trading [redacted]

But happened was that in [redacted] I was [redacted] and I was [redacted] I would get good [redacted] try one because I had [redacted] time to examine the advice. I took the tire with the understanding that they would guarantee it.

I run the tire 8 weeks and part of [redacted] by there and left it a [redacted] my wheel and tire. I was [redacted] would be $7.50 on another [redacted] approximately 27.00 or 28.00 [redacted] I did recall the start [redacted] and I can buy the same [redacted] any service stations as I tell them I had been [redacted] still feel that way.

I had been trading with Walter Isham paying cash and using my courtesy cards, my wife traded there altogether, averaging $6.00 to $8.50 a month counting car & grease jobs, etc. I'm through now though, because apparently Walter has got big ideas and don't be bothered with an individual customer who has traded with him off and on for several years. He rip two tires, I traded one off last week and the new one will be the first one I've started off on anything but Humble in 15 years; but I've switched to Gulf because there is a station about two blocks down from Walter's place on 34th street and it is pretty handy there.

I realize that these things do not concern The Texas Company however you appear control them and that is just as it should be. I sincerely hope that Walter wakes up before it is too late someday because I've always had a high regard for him.

Sincerely,

Mr. J. E. Payne
Assistant Division Manager
Sales Department
The Texas Company
Dallas 8, Texas

Dear Mr. Caldwell:

I very greatly appreciate your letter in response to the

I realize now that what I did when I wrote the notation on the statement which was returned to you was unfilled for on my part. However I feel that Mr. Lehon didn't treat me fairly at all and by rights we both have quit trading with him.

What happened was that in February I had a tire which I had to replace. I was thinking in terms of a new tire because I travel all the time. However, the great man waiting on me at Walker's told me that I would get the same service from a Goodyear or Firm a new tire - which I personally disliked, but Walter backed him up and said they would stand behind it and guarantee that I would get good service from it. I decided then if they were that good I'd try one because I had three other tires and if this one and it would be a good thing to compare the service. I took the tire with the understanding that they would guarantee it.

I ran the tire 6 weeks and part of the third thing off of it, so I took it by there and left it - expecting a fair allowance. When I went back to get my wheel and tire, I was told that the tire especially were not and the mileage would be 37.50 on another tire. I am sure they have records to show that approximately 17,000 of 18,000 was the life that I got out of the tire. I did recall the exact mileage, but the comparison, I think, is enough - and I can buy the same quality tire for less from [illegible] practically any service station so I felt that I had been discriminated thoroughly and I still feel that way.

I had been getting gas [illegible] and using my courtesy cards, my wife traded there although my average was 30.00 to 35.00 a month running such a great deal, etc. I've known a few months, however, apparently Walter has gotten big ideas and don't be believed with my additional business and has treated him off and on for several years. He and the boys, I guess can get back and the one who will be the first one I've changed out on anything and therefore is 15 years) but I've noticed in only business there is a similar attitude down from Walter's place on [illegible] and it is costing many dimes.

I realize that these things do not concern the Texas Company however you could control them and that is just as it should be. I sincerely hope that Walter wakes up before it is too late because they always are a delight for me to [illegible] him.

Yours very truly,

J. E. Caldwell

Dear Mr. Payne:

I realize now that what I did when I wrote the notation on the statement which was returned to you was unsalled for on my part. However I feel that Mr. Lyman didn't treat me fairly at all and my wife and I both have quit trading with him.

What happened was this: In February I had a tire which I had to replace. I was thinking in terms of a new tire because I travel 2[illegible] the time. However the young man waiting on me at Walter's told me that I would get the same service from a recap or from a new tire - which I certainly doubted, but later bowled him up and said they would stand behind it and guarantee that I would get good service from it. I decided then if they were that good I'd try one because I had three other new ones on the car and it would be a good time to compare the service. I took the tire with the understanding that the would guarantee it.

I ran the tire [illegible] and part of the tread along off of it, so I took it by there and left it - expecting a fair adjustment. When I went back to get my wheel and tire, I was told that the tire was half worn out and the adjustment would be $7.80 on another recap - or on a new tire they would sell me one for approximately $7.00 or $8.00. The tire had been run approximately 6000 miles I did recall the exact mileage, but I've forgotten. I didn't want a recap - and I can buy the same quality tire for less from a [illegible]-zone also, practically my service station; so I felt that I had been flim-flammed thoroughly and I still feel that way.

I had been trading with Walter Lyman paying cash and using my courtesy cards, my wife traded there, averaging $40.00 to $50.00 a month counting we & grease jobs, $[illegible]. I'm through now though, because apparently Walter has got [illegible] and can't be bothered with an individual customer who has traded with him off and on for several years. We've traded one off last week and the new one will be the first one I've started off on anything but Havoline in 15 years, but I've switched to Ours because there is a station about two blocks from Walter's place on 34th street and it is pretty handy there.

I realize that these things do not concern the Texas Company because you operate control them and that is just as it should be. I sincerely hope that Walter wakes up before it is too late because I've always had a high regard for him.

Sincerely,

Jack E. Price

Dear Mr. Odoms:

Reference is made to previous correspondence concerning the 15 x 1600 tire which you purchased in the summer of 1957 from the G & M Auto Service in La Grande, Oregon.

We have a detailed report from our Seattle office, and based upon the information furnished, it appears the tire in question was a recap and dealer Woodell so advised you at the time of the sale. According to Mr. Woodell's records, the recap tire sold for $16.00, and he advised you there was no guarantee on a used recap tire.

Furthermore, Mr. Woodell stated he wrote to you and explained that he did not guarantee the tire and would be unable to make any adjustment.

It appears this sale was fully explained to you before the purchase, and it was handled in a businesslike manner.

We greatly appreciate your business and are sorry such an incident occurred.

IN THE MATTER OF
FIRESTONE TIRE & RUBBER CO.
DATE 1/27/61 REPORTER

New York 17, N.Y., July 1, 1952

IMPORTANT ITEM

FIRESTONE TO MARKET NEW DRI-CHARGED BATTERY EARLY THIS FALL.

To give you complete data regarding this new revolutionary unit, we show below questions and answers covering its amazing story - READ CAREFULLY.

1. Q - What is the Firestone Dri-Charged Battery?

   A - A Firestone Dri-Charged Battery is a revolutionary new storage battery for cars, trucks, tractors and for all applications in connection with the starting and operation of combustion engines.

2. Q - What is new about the Firestone Dri-Charged battery?

   A - The new battery is (1) a "dry" battery when it is manufactured, when it is shipped, and when it is delivered to the retailer's shop; (2) the new battery is "born" the moment the acid is added just a few minutes before it is placed in the consumer's car ---the first day in the life of the new Firestone Dri-Charged battery is used in the operation of the vehicle.

   (Up to this time, the life of modern storage batteries began at the factory. The acid in the battery began its attack on the plates before the new batteries left the manufacturers. The life continued to seep out of the batteries in warehouses and in the hands of dealers where they often remained on shelves for months before actual sale.)

3. Q - How is it possible to manufacture the new Dri-Charged battery?

   A - The development of (1) a new glass (diatomaceous-earth-fiberglass composition) separator and (2) a tough (polyethylene plastic) that is impervious to acid and a container for the indefinite holding and storage of acid, make the new battery possible. The Dri-Charged separators stay at top strength until acid is added--for months and even years. The new acid containers, shipped separately to dealers, will hold the acid at full strength indefinitely.

4. Q - Will the Dri-Charged battery perform the same as an ordinary battery after being put into service?

A - After acid is added to a Dri-Charged battery it operates in exactly the same manner as a wet battery. However, since it is absolutely fresh and has the new type separator, the life is greater than the ordinary battery.

5. Q - Will the Dri-Charged battery require the addition of distilled water as frequently as a regular battery?

A - The amount of water that must be added to any battery in service is dependent only on the amount of charge which the battery receives. There is no difference in operation of the new Dri-Charged battery after acid has been added.

6. Q - Will the Dri-Charged battery with special processed plates deteriorate as quickly from lack of water as the present battery?

A - After the Dri-Charged battery is put into service, it operates in the same manner as a wet charged battery and, therefore, may be damaged by failure to add water when necessary, the same as a wet battery.

7. Q - Will the Dri-Charged battery last as long as the ordinary battery?

A - The Firestone Dri-Charged battery will last longer than the ordinary battery. All Dri-Charged batteries are guaranteed for three months longer than the ordinary battery. All of the life built into the Dri-Charged battery is used by the consumer.

8. Q - How much more will a Dri-Charged battery cost?

A - Since Dri-Charged batteries will last longer than ordinary batteries and have a three months' longer guarantee, the cost per month of service is less than the ordinary battery.

Mr. Louis M. Faber
Retail Gasoline Dealers Association
519 North 16th Street
Milwaukee, Wisconsin

Dear Lou:

When last I saw you in Washington you discussed with me the policy of The Texas Company with respect to the sale of accessories through service stations and stated that the only report you had of an adverse nature was in connection with the Don O'Connell Service Station at 60th and Vleit, Wauwatosa, Wisconsin.

Because we have a definitely established policy in our Company which prohibits the exerting of influence or pressure on any dealer with respect to his purchases of TBA merchandise, I was rather concerned with this report and determined to investigate it immediately. This was done and for your information I give you my findings:

Our Representative in charge of the Milwaukee area, Mr. Blackburn, is one of our most dependable men and understands our policies thoroughly. I found, as you indicated, that Mr. O'Connell had been selling Great Northern batteries for some time and further that he still sells them. In discussing accessory sales our Representative undoubtedly pointed out to Mr. O'Connell, as he might to any other Texaco dealer, that his business might be more profitable if he handled some nationally advertised brands of accessories, and in this case we are advised that Mr. O'Connell called in the Firestone salesman to discuss the matter with him. Our people did not indicate in any way that the handling of Firestone merchandise or any other kind of merchandise had any bearing on Mr. O'Connell's contractual or lease agreements with us. I further learn that as a result of an agreement between Mr. O'Connell and Firestone he enjoys a very favorable price on Firestone batteries and that he is well pleased with his arrangement.

Early this spring The Texas Company made some improvements at this service station including new fluorescent lighting and a complete set of counters in the salesroom for the purpose of displaying automobile accessories. Several lines of TBA merchandise are on display and a casual review shows Gates fan belts, Dole thermostats, Durkee inner radiator cleaner, Zecol polish, Richardson fishing rods and a number of other items, which would hardly indicate that Mr. O'Connell is anywhere near 100% Firestone or 100% anything else.

Incidentally I understand that the Firestone sales organization have been pursuing a very vigorous sales drive in the Milwaukee area, but there has been no connection in this work between the Firestone organization and The Texas Company. Frankly, we being a nationwide Company ourselves, and advertising our products on a national basis, feel there is some advantage to Texaco dealers handling accessories that are likewise nationally advertised, but we have neither the right nor the desire to dictate in any way what brands a Texaco dealer shall handle. We believe that he will increase his profits by handling tires, tubes and accessories and we encourage him in this. Our men may suggest certain brands of accessories to handle, but if a man goes beyond a suggestion or if he uses pressure or threats to have his suggestion followed he is liable to immediate dismissal from our service.

We have not discussed this complaint with Mr. O'Connell because I felt you would not want it so, but I suggest that you ought to know our Mr. Blackburn who would, I am sure, be very happy to discuss our general policy with you and talk about any specific cases you have in mind.

I know that you have a very friendly feeling for The Texas Company and because you were interested enough to report this case to me I thought you would like to know what my investigation developed. We want to be fair with our dealers at all times and if on occasion a misunderstanding exists we want to know about it. For that reason I appreciate your talking to me on this matter.

Sincerely yours,

Signed: Walter Hochuli

MR. SULLIVAN: If your Honor please, I am speaking this morning because I feel that I have been intimately thrown into the position of TEXACO and as counsel for TEXACO I think I can fairly state to you, your Honor, exactly how we find ourselves today. I feel that there have been some remarks made during the course of this week, your Honor, that might imply that Respondents have been employing dilatory tactics in connection with these hearings.

Under the circumstances present here in this record we firmly believe that such remarks are wholly unwarranted.

Consider, for a minute, the posture, if you will, that TEXACO finds itself in. For reasons which have been expressed to your Honor we believe that the Commission's unusual order in this proceeding is illegal and we have sought desperately in several courts and indeed are still fighting in courts today to establish the point that our basic rights have been violated.

Having no alternative we have appeared at this hearing to defend against what we believe would be further evidence on the rather all-encompassing issue here of competitive effects.

Now, instead of a proffer of evidence through the mouths of witnesses which we are convinced we would have been able to meet through and destroy through cross-examination we were met we feel with an unprecedented extension of the doctrine of official notice. This we believe has had the the burden of going forward with these hearings to the Respondents.

Now, this we contend is completely foreign to the American system of jurisprudence.

On July 17, after the Commission counsel in support of this complaint rested his case, TEXACO informed your Honor that it would require at least until July 23 at 10 a.m. in which to make a determination as to whether or not it would rebut the 3 tables from the Firestone case.

Our position with respect to the 3 tables has been explained in detail to your Honor on July 16 and July 17. However, so there can be no mistake, TEXACO believes that to admit compounded hearsay against a respondent without any foundation testimony whatsoever and without the right of cross-examination and the consequent shifting of the entire burden of proof contravenes all applicable Constitutional and statutory requirements.

Now, the first table of which your Honor has taken official notice purports to show the arrangement between 18 oil companies and some 11 tire companies with respect to the marketing of "private brand tires" under the "purchase-resale plan."

Now, the second table purports to show the products offered for sale by 18 rubber companies, and the third table based upon a survey taken by individuals unknown who never appeared in Court purports to show replacement tire purchases by automobile owners in 1954.

This collection of hearsay material which was rightly the burden of going forward with these hearings to the Respondents.

Now, this we contend is completely foreign to the American system of jurisprudence.

On July 17, after the Commission counsel in support of this complaint rested his case, TEXACO informed Your Honor that it would require at least until July 23 at 10 a.m. in which to make a determination as to whether or not it would rest the 3 tables from the Firestone case.

described as being worthless and unreliable by the Commission counsel in the Firestone case has now been officially noticed pursuant to what we contend is an illegal remand which call for the taking of evidence on market data from which an assessment might be made as to the competitive affects of the sales commission plan.

Now, it is TEXACO's position that the sum total of the 3 tables adds up to zero when measured against any probative evidence standard.

However, TEXACO is entitled to a reasonable opportunity to make a determination as to whether it will exercise its undouted right to introduce rebuttal evidence. We could go two ways on rebuttal evidence, as I see it, your Honor.

We could attempt to introduce or proffer to your Honor what we believe would be equally unreliable and meaningless, statistics culled from various sources, various periodicals and so forth, or, a rebuttal could consist of a frontal attack on the statistics and each of them which were officially noticed by your Honor.

Now, considering the fact that the motion askin- your Honor to take official notice was not received until July 11 and was not granted in part at least until July 18, we believe that the essence of fair play and due process calls for reasonable opportunity to make a decision in this matter. It is not a decision that can be made in 48 hours. It is a decision we believe which requires mature reflection.

Now, if we decide to rebut it is our present judgment that an effective rebuttal would require the production of

We could attempt to introduce our proffer to your Honor what we believe would be equally verifiable and meaningless, statistics culled from various sources, various periodicals and so forth, or, a rebuttal could consist of a frontal attack on the statistics and each of them which were officially noticed by your Honor.

Now, considering the fact that the motion asking your Honor to take official notice was not received until July 11 and was not granted in part at least until July 16, we believe that the essence of fair play and due process calls for reasonable opportunity to make a decision in this matter. Now, if we decide to rebut it in our present judgment that an effective rebuttal would require the production of documents from and the taking of testimony from many, if not all, of the companies listed on the 3 tables.

Now, to illustrate, if we attempt to and decide to attack the accuracy of Table No. 3, the survey, which purports to reflect replacement tire purchases in the year 1954, we find this your Honor: We find that to our knowledge there is no other comparable survey in existence for the year 1954, and we also find, if your Honor please, through inquiries that the information, the exact figures or nearly exact figures which would be required in order to rebut this table, are considered by the tire companies, small and large, as trade secrets, which we are informed they will not voluntarily divulge.

Now, this means that if we determine on this course we are going to be forced to request the issuance of subpoena duces tecum and subpoenas ad testificandum to individuals in and to all of the companies listed on the exhibits in an attempt to obtain accurate ~~information~~ figures.

Now, this, of course, unfortunately would be an immense and a time-consuming undertaking, but it would be an undertaking, your Honor, which is not of our making. In addition, if we determine to make a rebuttal as to the other companies we would give serious consideration to the presentation of testimony, documentary and otherwise, as to the sales commission plans which other companies, tire companies, that is, such as Generd, Seiberging, Dayton, Lee, Gates and Dunlop have with other oil companies.

To illustrate further, we must consider the documents from and the taking of testimony from many, if not all, of the companies listed on the 3 tables.

Now, to illustrate, if we attempt to and decide to attack the accuracy of Table No. 3, the survey, which purports to reflect replacement fire purchases in the year 1954, we find this your Honor: We find that to use our knowledge there is no other comparable survey in existence for the year 1954, and we also find, if your Honor please, through inquiries that the information, the exact figures or nearly exact figures which would be required in order to vount this table, are considered by the fire companies, small and large, as trade secrets, which we are informed they will not voluntarily divulge.

Now, this means that if we determine on this course we are going to be forced to request the issuance of subpoena duces tecum and subpoenas ad testificandum to individuals in and to all of the companies listed on the exhibits in an attempt to obtain accurate ~~information~~ figures.

Now, this, of course, unfortunately would be an immense and a time-consuming undertaking, but it would be an undertaking, your Honor, which is not of our making. In addition, if we determine to make a rebuttal as to the other companies we would give serious consideration to the presentation of testimony, documentary and otherwise, as to the sales commissio plans which other companies, fire companies, that is, such as General, Setterlin, Dayton, Lee, Gates and Dunlop have with other oil companies.

To illustrate further, we must consider the possibility of attempting to show through statistics, the overall effect of the sales commission method of distribution, and the steady decline in the market shares during the period from 1946 through 1961 by those tire companies which utilize the sales commission plan.

Respondents' Exhibit 109J

Now, the foregoing illustrations are meant your Honor to point up the enormous undertaking which we have been confronted with here and which has been thrust upon us by this shifting of the burden of the proof.

Now, the material of which I speak, your Honor, can not be obtained in some magic drawer or through the pushing of some automatic button. It is going to require a lengthy and costly production of material by process of this Court, and the further complication of making this decision is to whether or not we wish to undertake what would be a further expensive proceeding.

Now, I believe your Honor can see from the foregoing that it is an impossibility for TEXACO to proceed with such an immense undertaking at the very minimum until Monday morning at 10 o'clock. And we respectfully urge your Honor to put this matter over until Monday morning at 10 o'clock to give us this opportunity to come to this decision as to whether or not we are going to call for the issuance of all these subpoenas which is the only course apparently open to us.

(July 30, 1964)

Mr. Milton Handler, of the bar of the Court of Appeals of New York, pro hac vice, by special leave of court, New York City, with whom Messrs. James O. Sullivan and Frederick W. P. Lorenzen, New York City, were on the brief, for petitioner in No. 17915.

Mr. Edgar E. Barton, of the bar of the Court of Appeals of New York, pro hac vice, by special leave of court, New York City, for petitioner in No. 17923.

Mr. John F. Doyle, Washington, D.C., also entered an appearance for petitioner in No. 17923.

Mr. Alvin L. Berman, Atty., Federal Trade Commission, with whom Messrs. James McI. Henderson, Gen. Counsel, and Louis Russell Harding, Atty., Federal Trade Commission, were on the brief, for respondent in Nos. 17915 and 17923.

Before WILBUR K. MILLER, WASHINGTON and BURGER, Circuit Judges.

WILBUR K. MILLER, Circuit Judge.

Texaco, Inc. (formerly The Texas Company) and The B. F. Goodrich Company have filed separate petitions for review of an order of the Federal Trade Commission which was issued April 15, 1963, after proceedings which will be described. The cases were heard together and will be disposed of in a single opinion.

On January 11, 1956, after an investigation which began at least as early as 1952, the Federal Trade Commission issued a complaint against the petitioners charging them with violating Section 5 of the Fedearl Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45, by engaging in unfair methods of competition in interstate commerce. Specifically, the object of the Commission's attack was the implementation of a contract between the two companies, entered into in 1940, in which Texaco undertook, in return for a commission to promote the sale of Goodrich tires, batteries and accessories (TBA) to its thousands of dealers in its petroleum products. It was alleged that Texaco has entered into a similar contract with Firestone Tire & Rubber Company.

The complaint stated that influence and control over the purchasing and marketing activities of its dealers has been and is being exercised by Texaco "by recommending, urging, persuading and causing them to purchase a substantial quantity of TBA products from Goodrich and Firestone, the sellers designated by it." The acts and practices of Goodrich and Texaco under the commission contract, the complaint said,

> "* * * have unduly frustrated, hindered, suppressed, lessened, restrained, prevented and eliminated competition in the sale of TBA products in commerce within the intent and meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act; have the capacity and tendency to restrain unreasonably and have restrained unreasonably such commerce in said products; and constitute unfair methods of competition and unfair acts and practices, in commerce, within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act."

Essentially, the complaint was that Texaco coerces its dealers, through economic pressure, to distribute Goodrich TBA and thus unfairly and unlawfully prevents Goodrich's competitors from selling TBA to Texaco's outlets.

Answers by the companies placed the essential allegations of the complaint in issue, after which evidentiary hearings were conducted over a period of nearly three years. They were concluded December 10, 1958. The examiner, in his initial decision issued October 23, 1959, found that Goodrich had not done anything to force Texaco outlets to buy its products; that there was neither charge nor proof that Goodrich had conspired with Texaco to restrain competition; and that the commissions paid by it under the contract were for substantial services rendered by Texaco in promoting the sale of its products. Accordingly, the initial decision of October 23, 1959, dismissed the complaint against Goodrich.

With respect to Texaco, the examiner found that the contracts between Texaco and its dealers do not contain any provision requiring the latter to purchase only Goodrich TBA. He said the commission paid to Texaco by Goodrich is based on mu-stantial services rendered by Texaco in promoting the sale of Goodrich TBA, and added:

> "No inference or implication can be drawn, simply from the contractual relationship between Texas and its dealers, that the degree of control by Texas over its dealers is sufficient to force its dealers to purchase only sponsored TBA."

The examiner found, however, that

> "* * * the record in this proceeding as a whole indicates that coercion and pressure was [sic], in fact, brought on a substantial number of dealers to induce them to purchase sponsored TBA and to discontinue the purchase or display of non-sponsored items."[1] [Emphasis supplied.]

Pursuant to this, the examiner's initial decision of October 23, 1959, ordered Texaco to cease and desist from coercing its dealers into purchasing TBA from any particular supplier.

In keeping with the deliberate progress of this proceeding, the Commission did not act on the initial decision of October 23, 1959, until March 9, 1961. On that day it handed down an opinion in which it not only reversed the examiner's dismissal of Goodrich but also found > "* * * that Texaco had sufficient economic power over its wholesale and retail petroleum distributors to cause them to purchase substantial amounts of sponsored TBA even without the use of overt coercive tactics * * *"

Proceeding from its assumption that Texaco had controlling economic power over its dealers, "even without the use of overt coercive tactics," the Commission said:

> "* * * the determination of whether Texaco's exercise of such economic power in favor of Firestone and Goodyear under the oil company's sales commission contracts with these rubber companies constitutes an unfair method of competition depends, therefore, upon the

[1] This was a rather extraordinary conclusion in view of the fact that not one of Texaco's more than 26,000 dealers was called to testify before the examiner in support of the complaint. The examiner based the statement on the testimony of five former Texaco dealers who said they had been coerced, although five other former dealers and 54 active dealers called by Texaco said they had never been coerced or influenced in any way as the Goodrich TBA.

competitive effects of these sales commission contracts; not upon whether Texaco has exercised its power to implement such contracts through the use of overt coercive tactics, or by more subtle, but equally effective, means.

"At issue in this litigation, then, is the legality of a particular method of distributing TBA used by respondents. A key fact in evaluating the competitive effects of respondents' use of the sales commission method of distributing TBA is the fact that Texaco has sufficient economic power with respect to its retail and wholesale petroleum distributors to cause them to purchase substantial quantities of the brand of TBA sponsored or sold by Texaco. But such economic power is a fact existing independently of any particular method of distributing TBA which Texaco may use. Whether the sales commission agreements between Firestone and Texaco and Goodrich and Texaco are unlawful must depend, therefore, upon the characteristics and the competitive effects of these sales commission agreements. For reasons set forth hereinafter, we conclude that this case must be remanded in order that market data may be introduced to show the competitive effects of Texaco's sales commission agreements with Goodrich and Firestone upon competing suppliers of tires, batteries and accessories at the manufacturing, wholesale and retail levels."

Having thus concluded that the legality of the sales commission agreements depends upon "the characteristics[2] and the competitive effects" of the agreements, the Commission closed its opinion by saying:

"However, the record in this case does not contain sufficient market data to enable the Commission to assess the competitive effects of the sales commission method of distributing TBA employed by these respondents. The case will be remanded to the hearing examiner for the taking of evidence indicating the competitive effects of the sales commission contracts at the manufacturing, wholesale and retail levels of TBA distribution."

[2]The "characteristics" of the agreements were of course fully known to the Commission, which had before it their complete text.

More than a year after the remand of March 9, 1961,[1] the examiner conducted hearings from July 16 to July 19, 1962, at which the only proof introduced was in the form of exhibits received over the objection of the petitioners. A new initial decision was filed by the examiner September 24, 1962. In it he incorporated the findings of fact of his first initial decision and made additional findings of fact based on the record as supplemented after remand. The examiner noted that he was bound by the Commission's reversal of his dismissal of Goodrich, and by its finding that Texaco has sufficient economic power over its dealers to cause them to purchase substantial amounts of sponsored TBA, even without the use of coercive tactics. He concluded that > "* * * the only issue left for consideration of the hearing examiner under the terms of the Commission's opinion and order of remand, is the competitive effects of the sales commission plan used by Goodrich with The Texas Company, and whether Texaco's exercise of such economic power in favor of Goodrich and Firestone under their sales commission contracts have sufficient competitive effect to constitute an unfair method of competition or an unfair act or practice."

The examiner disposed of the "only issue left for [his] consideration" by concluding that

> "The use of the sales commission plan of distribution of TBA by the respondents, The Texas Company and The B. F. Goodrich Company as herein found, has a tendency and capacity to restrict, restrain or lessen competition in the sale of TBA products and constitutes an unfair method of competition and an unfair act and practice in commerce within the intent and meaning of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act."

In obedience to the Commission's order on remand, the examiner abandoned his former position, held Goodrich as a respondent, and concluded:

> "The use of the sales commission method of distribution by Goodrich was designed to take advantage of the economic control which Texaco had over its dealers, and by such use, Goodrich was able to obtain an unfair advantage over its competitors in selling to Texaco stations and in addition, aided and abetted Texaco in removing from the open market a substantial number of new and established Texaco dealers by causing them to purchase Goodrich TBA exclusively or in substantial quantities, and thereby excluding competitors of Goodrich who might otherwise have been able to sell their TBA to a substantial number of such Texaco dealers."

[1] A part of this period was consumed in the petitioners' unsuccessful attempt to enjoin further hearings.

Although he had the first time dismissed Goodrich, and had merely ordered Texaco to cease and desist from the coercive practices he had found from the testimony of five ex-dealers, this time the examiner entered a broad order as to both respondents. He ordered Texaco to cease and desist from entering into or continuing in effect any contract with Goodrich or any other rubber company or tire manufacturer, or any other supplier of tires, batteries or accessories, by the terms of which Texaco receives anything of value in connection with the sale of TBA to its dealers. The examiner ordered Goodrich to cease and desist from operating under its contract with Texaco and prohibited it from entering into a similar contract with any other marketing oil company.

The order of remand of March 9, 1961, was entered by a Commission composed of Chairman Kintner and Commissioners Secrest, Anderson and Kern. Accompanying it was the opinion to which we have referred, written by Chairman Kintner and concurred in by the other three members of the Commission. Shortly thereafter—on March 21, 1961—Earl W. Kintner was replaced as Chairman by Paul Rand Dixon, who had not been a member of the Commission theretofore. One of the acts of the new Chairman when he had been in office only a short time led to the phase of the proceeding which we shall now consider.

On February 18, 1963, before the Commission had acted on the examiner's new initial decision of September 24, 1962, Texaco filed a motion that Chairman Dixon withdraw from participation in the proceeding or that the Commission determine him to be disqualified. The basis of the motion was a speech made by Dixon before the National Congress of Petroleum Retailers, Inc., in Denver, Colorado, on July 25, 1961, while the case was pending before the examiner after remand and before any steps had been taken by him. In the course of his address, according to a press release issued by the Commission itself, the then newly appointed Chairman of the Commission said:

> "Your problems are many, and many of them are the problems of the Federal Trade Commission, too, for the Commission is concerned with promoting fair competition. More particularly, many of your problems are ours because they arise from practices prohibited by two of the most important statutes administered by the Commission—discriminatory pricing, prohibited by the Robinson-Patman Act, and other unfair acts, practices, and methods of competition, prohibited by the Federal Trade Commission Act.
>
> "We at the Commission are well aware of the practices which plague you and we have challenged their legality in many important cases.
>
> "You know the practices—price fixing, price discrimination, and overriding commissions on TBA.
>
> "You know the companies—Atlantic, Texas, Pure, Shell, Sun, Standard of Indiana, American, Goodyear, Goodrich, and Firestone.
> "Some of these cases are still pending before the Commission; some have been decided by the Commission and are in the courts on appeal. You may be sure that the Commission will continue and, to the extent that increased funds and efficiency permit, will increase its efforts to promote fair competition in your industry."

The Commission denied the motion that it determine Chairman Dixon to be disqualified, and he declined to withdraw from participation. Instead, he took part in the entry of the order of April 15, 1963, more than two years after the remand, which adopted the examiner's initial decision and order of September 25, 1962, which, as we have seen, was adverse to Texaco and Goodrich and which is now under review. Before turning to the question whether the order of April 15, 1963, was supported by the record, we consider the propriety of Chairman Dixon's participation in that decision.

In Gilligan, Will & Co. v. Securities and Exchange Comm'n, 2 Cir., 267 F. 2d 461 (1959), the Commission, three days after commencing proceedings, issued a press release stating in effect that Gilligan, Will & Co. and others had violated Section 5 of the Securities Act of 1933. Although the Second Circuit held that petitioners' failure to make timely objection had waived their right to assert the defect of prejudgment, the Court strongly disapproved of the Commission's behavior. It said, at pages 468–9:

> "* * * [T]he Commission's reputation for objectivity and impartiality is opened to challenge by the adoption of a procedure from which a disinterested observer may conclude that it has in some measure adjudged the facts as well as the law of a particular case in advance of hearing it.* * *"

In this case, a disinterested reader of Chairman Dixon's speech could hardly fail to conclude that he had in some measure decided in advance that Texaco had violated the Act.

We said in Amos Treat & Co. v. Securities and Exchange Comm'n, 113 U.S. App. D.C. 100, 107, 306 F. 2d 260, 267 (1962):

> "* * * [A]n administrative hearing of such importance and vast potential consequences must be attended, not only with every element of fairness but with the very appearance of complete fairness. Only thus can the tribunal conducting a quasi-adjudicatory proceeding meet the basic requirement of due process."

The administrative hearing in the present case was certainly as important as that in the Amos Treat case, and has perhaps even greater potential consequences. We conclude that Chairman Dixon's participation in the hearing amounted in the circumstances to a denial of due process which invalidated the order under review. If that were the only infirmity in the order, we should be constrained to remand the cases to the Commission for a de novo consideration in which Chairman Dixon does not take part. His Denver speech, made before the matter was submitted to the Commission but while it was before the examiner, plainly reveals that he had already concluded that Texaco and Goodrich were violating the Act, and that he would protect the petroleum retailers from such abuses.

But that is not all. The Supreme Court has said that in reviewing the substantiality of the evidence we must consider all the evidence including "the body of evidence opposed to the Board's view." Universal Camera Corp. v. N.L.R.B., 340 U.S. 474, 487–8, 71 S. Ct. 456, 465, 95 L. Ed. 456 (1951). Viewed in this way we are convinced that the order of April 15, 1963, is not supported by substantial evidence on the record as a whole. The order under review, as we have said, adopted the examiner's initial decision and order of September 24, 1962, after slight modification. In it, the Commission said:

> "Respondents contend that the tables, surveys, and matters officially noticed by the examiner on remand were improperly admitted both because they are inappropriate objects for official notice and because respondents were afforded inadequate opportunity to rebut them.
> "It is not necessary to pass upon the correctness of these contentions, since the Commission excludes from its present decision any reliance upon the challenged evidence. It finds that the other evidence of record amply supports the conclusions and the order of the hearing examiner. The legal principles relevant to this decision need not be reexamined here because they are set forth at length in the opinions of the Commission in Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., et al., Docket 6486, March 9, 1961, and Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., et al., Docket 6487, March 9, 1961. * * *"[1]

Thus, in its consideration of the revised initial decision and order, the Commission expressly disclaimed any reliance upon the evidence introduced after remand, and held that the evidence or record before the remand "amply supports the conclusions and order of the hearing examiner." This was the same record which the Commission on March 9, 1961, had said "does not contain sufficient market data to enable the Commission to assess the competitive effects of the sales commission method of distributing TBA employed by these respondents."

But, in successfully resisting an action in the District Court by Texaco and Goodrich to enjoin the remand, the new Commission contended that it "needed additional evidence in order to decide the issues presented." It asserted that the opinion of

[1] It is perhaps not without significance that Commissioner Anderson, the only member of the Commission as constituted on April 15, 1963, who had participated in the remand of March 9, 1961, did not concur "for the reason that the command of the remand order of March 9, 1961, has not been met and complied with * * *."

March 9, 1961, ordering the remand showed that the Commission "is not seeking a retrial of matters already tried but rather envisions supplementary evidence on what it considered to be significant facts in any assessment of the competitive effects of the sales commission agreements * * *."

Despite these representations, the Commission on April 15, 1963, contrary to the former Commission's determination that the record did not justify such a finding, found the petitioners in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act on the basis of that record. It adopted the examiner's revised order which prohibited Goodrich from entering into sales commission agreements with Texaco or any other marketing oil company, and prohibited Texaco from entering into such agreements with Goodrich or any other rubber company or tire manufacturer, or any other supplier of tires, batteries or accessories.

The new Commission placed itself in an anomalous position: first, it vigorously asserted (as the former Commission had held when it remanded the proceeding) that it could not find against the petitioners without additional evidence as to the competitive effects of the sales commission contracts; then, it decided that same issue against the petitioners without any consideration of the record made after remand, and without repudiating or even commenting upon its confessed inability to reach that issue previously.

Although the two Commissions reached diametrically opposite conclusions from the same record as to whether unfair competition had been shown, both based their action upon their conclusion that

> "Texaco has sufficient economic power over its wholesale and retail petroleum distributors to cause them to purchase substantial amounts of sponsored TBA even without the use of overt coercive tactics. * * *." [Emphasis supplied.][5]

[5] Although the examiner concluded in his first initial decision that the record "as a whole" indicated coercion had been brought on "a substantial number of dealers" (five former dealers out of many thousands of former and active dealers), the remanding Commission apparently did not regard such meager proof as convincing, for it expressly discarded it as a basis of decision, and concluded as stated in the text above that Texaco had controlling economic power over its dealers without the use of coercive tactics.

The examiner's first initial decision had not so concluded, but the remanding Commission's conclusion as to Texaco's economic power was parroted by him in his initial decision after remand. He added thereto the following

But neither Commission referred to any evidence in support of this finding, and neither made any finding of fact which would sustain a conclusion that Texaco had such economic power over its dealers, and we are unable to see substantial evidence on the record as a whole to sustain that conclusion. The Commission did not reject its examiner's statement that no inference can be drawn from the contracts between Texaco and its dealers that the former has sufficient economic power over the latter to force them to purchase only sponsored TBA. And it did not say (for there was no proof from which it could conclude) that Texaco's treatment of its dealers and their reaction indicated that Texaco had, or had attempted to exercise, the controlling economic power over its dealers that the Commission found. Indeed, the examiner found as a fact that Texaco's policy, announced to all its salesmen as long ago as June 1, 1948, is that it has neither the right nor the desire to dictate to the dealer or to influence him in any way as to the type of merchandise he should handle, or the source from which he should purchase it.* This finding was adopted by the Commission.

Consequently, we find no basis in the record for the Commission's conclusion that Texaco has controlling economic power over its dealers. The contracts with the dealers do not give rise to it, and it is the announced policy of Texaco to respect the independence of its dealers; as the evidence overwhelmingly shows, its practice has followed its policy. The mere sentence selected from another portion of the remanding Commission's opinion: "Such economic power exists independent of any particular method of distributing TBA which Texaco might use." This new conclusion was adopted by the Commission in its decision of April 15, 1963. Consequently, both Commissions concluded that Texaco had controlling economic power without the use of coercive tactics.

* Finding of Fact No. 8 in the examiner's post-remand initial decision is as follows:

"As a result of an antitrust suit filed against Standard Oil Company of California, Walter Hochuli, General Sales Manager of The Texas Company, on June 1, 1948, issued a so-called policy letter to the territorial managers, which was subsequently disseminated down the chain of command to salesmen. This letter advised the personnel that they were to consider a Texaco dealer as an independent businessman; that he should be encouraged to expand his business by purchasing TBA; that the personnel have a right to recommend certain lines, but that Texas has neither the right nor the desire to dictate to the dealer or to influence him in any way as to the type of merchandise he should handle, or the source from which he should purchase it; that the Texaco dealer must be permitted to operate as an independent businessman and anyone who violates this policy would be subject to immediate dismissal."

fact that Texaco is a giant corporation and the dealers are in the main small businessmen cannot be said to demonstrate controlling economic power over the latter, particularly when, as here, the evidence is to the contrary. We hold, therefore, that the Commission erred in concluding that Texaco has sufficient economic power over its dealers, without the use of coercive tactics, to cause them to buy substantial quantities of Goodrich TBA. We have already noted that the Commission did not find coercive tactics had been used, and that the record as a whole demonstrates the contrary.

From its unwarranted assumption that Texaco had such economic power, the Commission proceeded to the conclusion that the question whether the exercise of that power in Goodrich's behalf amounts to an unfair method of competition depends on the "competitive effects" of the sales commission agreements. It said that Texaco's controlling economic power is a "key fact" in evaluating the competitive effects of the sales commission contracts. Thus, the Commission itself said that the supposed need to examine the "competitive effects" was due entirely to its conclusion that Texaco not only had, but exercised, controlling economic power over its dealers without using coercive tactics. This conclusion was indeed the keystone of the Commission's ultimate decision, without which it cannot stand. That being true, our holding that there is not a substantial evidentiary basis in the record for the Commission's assumption that Texaco had and exercised coercive economic power causes its conclusion based thereon to collapse.

The Commission's sweeping order not only condemned the Texaco-Goodrich contract but also held illegal any sales commission arrangement between an oil marketing company and a TBA supplier. This either attributes to all such oil companies inherent controlling economic power over their dealers, or implies there is basic illegality in such arrangements. Our view is that, in any case, there must be substantial evidence on the whole record of the supposed economic power of the oil marketing company before a prohibiting order can be based upon it. As to the implication that sales commission agreements between oil companies and TBA suppliers are basically illegal regardless of their terms, we disagree. There is no reason to condemn such contracts unless they result in unfair competition. An oil marketing company's recommendation to its dealers that they purchase a particular line of TBA, even though it receives a commission for doing so, is not incompatible with its primary business of selling petroleum products. The dealers, at least in the situation here involved, are quite free to accept or reject the recommendation, and to handle a different line if they think it would be more acceptable to their customers.

The Commission's broad order prohibited contracts for sponsorship of TBA sales to oil marketing company dealers only when the company receives compensation for the sponsorship. The vice found by the Commission in the arrangement seems therefore to be the payment of commissions. Yet the Commission adopted the findings of the examiner which described in detail the services performed by Texaco under its contract with Goodrich and also adopted his conclusion that > "The consideration for the payment of a commission to Texas under the sales commission contract is based upon substantial services rendered by Texas in promoting the sale of Goodrich TBA to Texaco dealers and distributors."

We see nothing illegal or even unethical in the payment of commissions for such services, except in instances where an oil marketing company forces its dealers through coercive tactics or controlling economic power to buy the sponsored products. Neither of those influences was proved in this case, and it may not be presumed that either will exist in future similar situations.

After four years of preliminary investigation followed by eight years of litigation, including the remand for additional evidence said to have been necessary but never used, the Commission has not been able to show illegality in the Texaco-Goodrich contract of 1940. During that long period, the companies necessarily have devoted much time and money to their defense. Although the Commission must be allowed considerable leeway in developing a record, its efforts in this case—fruitless after a dozen years—have exceeded permissible limits and have had unreasonably harassing and oppressive effects upon the companies under attack. Because the Commission's drastic orders are not supported by the record as a whole and because of the undue protraction of the administrative process, we are of the opinion that this long drawn out proceeding should now be terminated. Accordingly, the order under review will be set aside, and the matter will be remanded to the Commission with instructions to dismiss the complaint.

It is so ordered.

WASHINGTON, Circuit Judge (concurring in part and dissenting in part):

I agree with the majority that Chairman Dixon's conduct disqualified him from participating in the Commission's order, and that the order must be set aside for that reason. I would not, however, dismiss the entire proceeding, either on the merits or because of the Commission's delays. I would remand for further consideration of the case by the Commission, without the participation of Chairman Dixon, and on a basis which I will outline later on.

I.

With reference to Chairman Dixon's conduct, I would add only this. Federal Trade Commissioners, like other adjudicators, are entitled to hold and express views on the laws they are charged with enforcing and applying. They "do not stand aloof on * * * chill and distant heights; and we shall not help the cause of truth by acting and speaking as if they do." [1] We do not equate impartiality with utter indifference. A judge does not deny litigants a fair hearing by sitting in a case "after he had expressed an opinion as to whether certain types of conduct were prohibited by law." [2] We do not expect a Trade Commissioner to be neutral on anti-monopoly policies.

A fair hearing is denied, however, if the administrative judge, prior to examining the evidence and findings, has indicated his belief that named individuals or firms are violating the statute, and the "guilt" or "innocence" of such parties depends on certain factual findings which are in dispute. Once an adjudicator has taken a position apparently inconsistent with an ability to judge the facts fairly, subsequent protestations of open-mindedness on his part cannot restore a presumption of impartiality. Whether justice was in fact done is not the issue; an administrative hearing "must be attended, not only with every element of fairness but with the very appearance of complete fairness." [3] We must presume that a fair hearing was denied [4] if a disinterested observer would have reason to believe that the Commissioner had "in some measure adjudged the facts * * * of a particular case in advance of hearing it."

Chairman Dixon's speech leaves a clear impression that his belief that petitioners had violated the Act was far stronger than the "reason to believe" which justifies the issuance of a complaint. Indeed, his speech suggests not only a substantial conviction that Texaco and Goodrich are violating the Act but an implied promise to support the petroleum retailers in their struggle against alleged abuses by their suppliers. An independent observer could fairly conclude that Chairman Dixon was in some measure pre-committed to a determination adverse to petitioners. We must therefore—at the least—vacate the Commission's order and remand to the Commission for a de novo consideration of the record and the arguments without the participation of Chairman Dixon.[6]

II. The Absence of Reviewable Findings

The Commission's decision consisted of an assertion that the "other evidence of record" amply supports the conclusions and the order of the Hearing Examiner. The legal principles relevant to this decision need not be reexamined here because they are set forth at length in the opinions of the Commission in Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. * * * and Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. * * *."

Section 8(b) of the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 1007(b) (1958), provides in part that all decisions "shall * * * include a statement of (1) findings and conclusions, as well as [5] Gilligan, Will and Co. v. Securities and Exchange Commission, 267 F.2d 461, 469 (2d Cir. 1959). In that case the Securities and Exchange Commission, three days after commencing adjudicatory proceedings, had issued a press release, stating that the parties involved had violated the relevant Act. The Second Circuit, in fact, strongly disapproved of the Commission's behavior, but held that petitioners had waived their right to object by failing to make a timely motion.

[6] Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, supra, is to be distinguished on the grounds that (a) the disqualification of the entire Commission, which was there sought, would have effectively precluded any enforcement of the Act against the respondent (the "necessity doctrine") and (b) the opinion does not indicate that the Commissioners had expressed a fixed bias against the respondent, rather a general "policy" bias against basing point systems.

[7] That is, exclusive of certain evidence adduced in the remand proceeding, which petitioners claimed was improperly admitted, and which the Commission in fact stated that it would not consider.

the reasons or basis therefor, upon all the material issues of fact, law or discretion presented on the record * * *." Recently, the Supreme Court set aside an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, partly on the ground that—

> "There are no findings and no analysis here to justify the choice made, no indication of the basis on which the Commission exercised its expert discretion. We are not prepared to and the Administrative Procedure Act will not permit us to accept such adjudicatory practice."[8]

The mere citation of earlier opinions does not provide a sufficient basis to understand and evaluate the Commission's decision on the facts of this case. There are a variety of facts and findings relied on by the Commission in the Goodyear and Firestone cases which cannot be readily assumed here. For example, on the issue of coercion, in Goodyear the Commission found that "Atlantic dealers have been orally advised by sales officials of the oil company that their continued status as Atlantic dealers and lessees will be in jeopardy if they do not purchase sufficient quantities of sponsored TBA."[9] In Firestone the Commission pointed to internal memoranda of the Shell Oil Company to support the conclusion of coercion. In both cases the Commission purported to make an examination of the competitive effects of the sales commission plan, saying, "Determination of illegality in this context requires an evaluation of competitive effects resulting from respondents' use of the sales commission method of distributing TBA,"[10] and, in pursuing an alternative theory of a tie-in arrangement, purported to make findings on Atlantic's and Shell's economic power in the "tying" commodity.

Also to be noted is the fact that on the same day that the Commission decided Goodyear and Firestone—March 9, 1961—it considered this case, and did not affirm the findings of actual coercion but remanded to the Examiner for the taking of further evidence on "competitive effects":

> "[T]he record in this case does not contain sufficient market data to enable the Commission to assess the competitive effects of the sales commission method of distributing TBA employed by these respondents." [11] [Emphasis supplied.]

On April 15, 1963, the Commission, reviewing the Hearing Examiner's remand decision, affirmed his conclusions of a statutory violation, even though it excluded from consideration any new evidence adduced on the remand, and cited the Goodyear and Firestone cases, even though the Commission had previously declined to find a violation on this record, when it remanded simultaneously with its formulation and application of legal theories in the companion cases. The one Commissioner who had participated in the earlier decisions and was on the Commission on April 15, 1963, dissented from the decision rendered on that date.

These considerations indicate, not that the evidence, as a whole, fails to support a finding of a Section 5 violation under a proper interpretation of that section, but that the Commission failed to perform its function of articulating the facts and spelling out its theories. The Commission's decision falls short of the standards required for judicial review, for we are unable to discern with a fair degree of certainty the facts or the theories relied on below.[12] Under the circumstances, we should express no opinion on the merits.

In my view, we should hold simply that a court must know why a Commission acted in order to fulfill the function of judicial review (Secretary of Agriculture v. United States, 347 U.S. 645, 74 S. Ct. 826, 98 L. Ed. 1015 (1954)), and that businessmen and other parties subject to administrative regulation are entitled to an explanation of their duties and obligations. Thus, even in the absence of the disqualification issue, we would—in my view—find it necessary to remand for a proper opinion. See Radio Station KFH Co. v. Federal Communications Commission, 101 U.S. App. D.C. 164, 247 F. 2d 570 (1957).

[11] In Goodyear and Firestone the Commission considered such "competitive effects" as division of markets between manufacturers, foreclosure of battery and accessory manufacturers, foreclosure of smaller tire manufacturers, restraint on expansion of smaller tire manufacturers' distribution systems, foreclosure of wholesalers, presumption in favor of wholesalers selling sponsored products, and the impact on wholesalers who also sell at retail.

For the reasons given, I would set aside the Commission's order but would pass neither on the merits nor on other issues argued by the parties. The Commission could then be required to produce a new opinion within a reasonable time, such as sixty days, meeting the standard for judicial review.

III.

Though, as I have indicated, I do not think we should pass on the merits, the majority has done so. Under the circumstances, I am constrained to say that in my view the majority's conclusion that the record does not contain sufficient evidence to support a finding of a Section 5 violation is very doubtful. The crucial failing, in the court's view, is the lack of evidence to establish that Texaco has sufficient economic power over its dealers to compel them to handle Goodrich tires exclusively. I submit that under the antitrust laws, Texaco's relationship to its dealers must probably be deemed inherently coercive. See, e.g., Simpson v. Union Oil Company of California, 377 U.S. 13, 84 S. Ct. 1051, 12 L. Ed. 2d 98 (1964); Standard Oil Company of California v. United States, 337 U.S. 293, 69 S. Ct. 1051, 93 L. Ed. 1371 (opinion for the Court per Frankfurter, J.), 323 (concurring opinion of Jackson, J.) (1949); Federal Trade Commission v. Motion Picture Advertising Service Co., 344 U.S. 392, at 402, 73 S. Ct. 361, 97 L. Ed. 426 (1953) (Frankfurter, J., in dissent, explaining his opinion in Standard Stations, supra); Osborn v. Sinclair Refining Co., 286 F. 2d 832 (4th Cir. 1961); United States v. Sun Oil Co., 176 F. Supp. 715, 719-20 (E. D. Pa. 1959); Schwing Motor Co. v. Hudson Sales Corp., 138 F. Supp. 899 (D. Md. 1956); United States v. General Motors Corp., 121 F. 2d 376, 398 (7th Cir.), cert. denied, 314 U.S. 618, 62 S. Ct. 105 86 L. Ed. 497 (1941). See, also, the recent opinion of the Seventh Circuit in Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 331 F. 2d 394 (1964). See, generally, S. Rep. No. 2073, 84th Cong., 2d Sess. (1956); H.R. Rep. No. 2850, 84th Cong., 2d Sess. (1956), U.S. Code Cong. and Adm. News 1956, p. 4596, relating to the Automobile Dealers Franchise Act, 70 Stat. 1125, 15 U.S.C. § 1221 et seq.

Evidence which might tend to show coercive power in this case includes (a) one year leases and sales agreements, terminable at the year's end upon 10 days' notice; (b) substantial contractual control by Texaco over the use, maintenance and appearance of stations (the obligations imposed by Texaco, in addition to being evidence of Texaco's bargaining power, are means by which Texaco could prematurely terminate the lease through enforcement of one of these obligations under cancellation provisions); (c) high personal investments by the lessees in their stations; (d) close dealer supervision by Texaco salesmen; (e) Goodrich's manifest understanding that Texaco controls its dealers (e.g., Goodrich's books refer to the dealers as "oil company controlled dealers"); (f) testimony of competing TBA suppliers that Texaco dealers felt they risked reprisal if they did not carry sponsored TBA; and (g) testimony of former Texaco dealers of the existence of a pattern of coercive conduct throughout their tenure. Other evidence in the record that Texaco imposed a course of purchasing behavior on the dealers may be summarized by quoting from page 51 of Respondent's brief:

> "* * * the services performed by Texaco pursuant to its contracts include: Stressing the importance of TBA to prospective dealers and recommending BFG and Firestone; giving advance notice of dealer selection to BFG or Firestone and introducing new dealers to their salesmen; assisting new dealers with adequate TBA inventories; encouraging its salesmen to write sponsored TBA orders without awaiting formal dealer request; calling on dealers with BFG or Firestone salesmen ('double teaming'); conducting frequent dealer meetings and training courses, with active BFG and Firestone participation; arranging for and participating in BFG and Firestone advertising and promotions; and permitting sponsored TBA purchases on its credit cards. Texaco training schools are conducted at company-owned service stations where only BFG or Firestone TBA is used. This can only solidify the dealer's 'choice' of sponsored TBA."

Thus, I suggest that it may well be the record as a whole would support findings of both the existence and the utilization of coercive economic power by Texaco over its dealers. Were we reviewing the Hearing Examiner's findings, and formulating the appropriate legal theory in the first instance, I suggest that we might also properly conclude that there was sufficient evidence of anti-competitive effect to warrant finding a violation under a tie-in theory.[11] But in the first instance it is the Commission, not this court, which must indicate what facts and what legal theories constrained it to find a violation. We could of course select those legal doctrines appearing in the cases cited in the Commission's opinion—Goodyear and Firestone—and those facts in the record before the Hearing Examiner, which would sustain the Commission's conclusions, and then affirm. But aside from the fact that such an approach would be less than faithful to the appropriate institutional relationship between this court and the Commission, it would not be possible in this case because of Chairman Dixon's disqualifying conduct. The delays in this case are serious.[12] But I would not terminate the proceedings because of them. The public interest in effective competition should not lightly be subordinated to Texaco's interest in speedy adjudication.

[11] On the appropriate test of anti-competitive effect necessary to sustain a finding that a tie-in violates Section 1 of the Sherman Act (which generally puts a more stringent burden on the Government than does Section 5 of the FTC Act), see e.g., Northern Pacific Railway Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1 at 5–6 78 S. Ct. 514, 2 L. Ed. 2d 545 (1958). The percentage of the gasoline station market for TBA controlled by Texaco, on any reading of the record, certainly affects a "not insubstantial" amount of interstate commerce. See International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 68 S. Ct. 12, 92 L. Ed. 20 (1947), and Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 330 82 S. Ct. 1502, 8 L. Ed. 2d 510 (1962).

On utilization of a tie-in theory under circumstances similar to those of the instant case, see Osborn v. Sinclair Refining Co., supra, 286 F. 2d 832 (4th Cir. 1961). The fact that Texaco's power and practices resulted in something less than exclusive dealer use of sponsored TBA would not seem to require a different result. Id. at 838–39. Docket No. 6485

The Texas Company, corporations

On June 7, 1965, the Supreme Court vacated the judgment of the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit which had set aside the Commission's order to cease and desist entered in the above-captioned proceeding, and remanded the case to that court "with instructions to remand it immediately to the Federal Trade Commission for further proceedings, without the participation of Chairman Dixon, in light of Atlantic Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, —— U.S. —— (1965)." Pursuant to the mandate of the Supreme Court, the Court of Appeals on June 16, 1965, remanded the case to the Commission.

In accordance with the directions of the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals,

It is ordered that:

(1) The Commission's decision and order of April 15, 1963, in which Chairman Dixon participated, be, and it hereby is, vacated.

[9314] (2) The appeals from the hearing examiner's initial decision of September 24, 1962, are set down for oral argument on July 8, 1965, at 2:00 p.m., in Room 532 of the Federal Trade Commission Building, Washington, D.C., with 45 minutes allowed for each side. All questions of law and fact presented by the appeals will be considered by the Commission on the basis of the entire record. The Commission suggests that the oral argument will be most useful if counsel focus on the question whether the facts of record in the present case bring it within the Supreme Court's decision in the Atlantic Refining Co. case.

[14] See, generally, Note, Judicial Acceleration of the Administrative Process: The Right to Relief from Unduly Protracted Proceedings, 72 Yale L. J. 574 (1963).

(3) Both sides may submit supplemental briefs with respect to the issues involved in the appeals, provided that such briefs are filed no later than August 9, 1965.

By the Commission, Commissioners Dixon and MacIntyre not participating.

PROCEEDINGS

[9477] The Bailiff: The Honorable Commissioners of the Federal Trade Commission. The Commission is now in session.

Commissioner Elman: This is the oral argument on remand in Docket 6485, B. F. Goodrich Company and Texas Company, Inc.

The Commission has allowed one hour and fifteen minutes to each side.

Mr. Peter Dias is appearing for the Commission and Mr. Milton Handler and Mr. Edgar Barton are appearing for respondents.

Have you agreed on the division of time, Mr. Handler?

Mr. Handler: Yes, Your Honor. I am going to take 45 minutes, and Mr. Barton will take thirty.

Commissioner Elman: Well, you be your own timekeeper. You may proceed.

Oral Argument of Milton Handler on Behalf of Respondent Texaco, Inc.

Mr. Handler: May it please the Commission, in focusing on the question posed by Your Honor's order, I propose, first, to analyze the Supreme Court's ruling in Atlantic, with emphasis on its precise ratio decidendi, and then to review the pertinent facts of record in the present case, to show that they do not fall within the condemnatory rules laid down by the Supreme Court.

I wish to emphasize at the outset that not a single [9478] operative fact which resulted in the invalidation of the Atlantic-Goodyear sales commission plan has been proved against Texaco and Goodrich, from which it follows that these proceedings should be dismissed.

What is it that was held unlawful in Atlantic?

The Supreme Court took pains to make clear that it did not regard the sales commission plan as per se unlawful. Indeed, the Solicitor General expressly disclaimed on all [sic] argument that the government was contending for per se illegality.

The nub of the Court's decision is found in the pithy words of Mr. Justice Clark at page 14 of the slip opinion, and I quote:

> "It is the oil company's power and overt acts towards its outlets that outlaws the sales commission plan."

Before turning to the matter of relief, the Court provided a concise summary of its substantive ruling in these words, at page 13, the paragraph immediately preceding V:

> "The short of it is that Atlantic, with Goodyear's encouragement and assistance, has martialled its full economic power in a continuing campaign to force its dealers and wholesalers to buy Goodyear products. The anticompetitive effects of this program are clear on the record."

If Your Honors please, the thrust of the Atlantic decision is that the coercive use of sales commission constitutes an unfair method of competition where the seller possesses and [9479] exercises control economic power over its dealers to force them to buy the sponsored TBA with demonstrable anticompetitive effects.

Any conceivable doubt as to the scope of the Court's ruling is completely removed by part 5 of the opinion dealing with the matter of relief.

If the Court's substantive doctrine had been that sales commission agreements are per se unlawful, obviously there could be no question of the propriety of forbidding such plans, and there would be nothing to discuss regarding the scope of the order.

But the whole point of part 5 was to justify the breadth of the order precisely because it was not limited to the conduct held unlawful, to wit, the coercive use of the plan.

Atlantic had strenuously urged that the order should enjoin only the use of overt coercive tactics. This argument was rejected—not because noncoercive use of the plan was itself a violation of law—it was rejected because of a settled principle of administrative law that permits an agency to forbid lawful conduct which it deems necessary for effective relief.

Justice Clark makes this point abundantly clear on page 14 where he states, and I quote, "The Commission was of the opionion that to enjoin the use of overt coercive tactics was insufficient. We think it was justified in this conclusion. The long existence of the plan itself, coupled with the coercive acts practiced by the Atlantic Company pursuant to it, warranted [9480] a decision to require more." And I underscore the words "to require more."

When all you do is forbid the unlawful conduct, you obviously are not requiring more.

It is quite significant—and I do not know whether Your Honors are familiar with transcript of the oral argument before the United States Supreme Court—it is quite significant that on oral argument, when closely questioned by various members of the Supreme Court, Government counsel was explicit that the Government was not claiming the sales commission arrangement itself was inherently unlawful, that it was not asking the Court to predicate illegality upon Atlantic's possession of coercive power, but rather upon its improper use of such power; and that such improper use consisted of the compulsion on a dealer to handle sponsored TBA against their will.

If I had the time, I could read the pertinent quotation, but if Your Honors do not have the transcript of the argument, we will make it available.

Substantiation of each and every one of these concessions that I have noted will be found on pages 72, 80, 52, 61 to 62, 82, 56, 58, 64 and 65 of the transcript of the oral argument before the Supreme Court.

In short, the Court was asked to find the Atlantic-Goodyear sales commission agreement unlawful because of the coercion, the improper use of coercive tactics, because of the [9481] improper exercise of Atlantic's economic power, and because of the anticompetitive effects which this resulted in. And that is what the Court did in holding the Atlantic-Goodyear sales commission plan unlawful. It held nothing more.

Now, if Your Honors please, the facts deemed controlling by the Supreme Court, and which are stressed in its opinion, fall under three main headings. One—coercion. Two—the possession and exercise of economic power over dealers to force them to purchase the sponsored TBA. Three—anticompetitive effect.

It is noteworthy that on each of these three categories of facts, there is a finding by either the Commission or the Court of appeals in our favor. What readily distinguishes Atlantic from this case is that the facts which were dispositive there were not proved here.

I invite Your Honors to read with me the Supreme Court's description of Atlantic's coercive tactics at page 8 of the slip opinion, the second full paragraph just above the Roman Numeral II.

> "The Commission stressed the evidence showing that 'Atlantic dealers have been orally advised by sales officials of the oil company that their continued status as Atlantic dealers and lessees will be in jeopardy if they do not purchase sufficient quantities of sponsored' tires, batteries and accessories. Indeed, some dealers lost their [9482] leases after being reported for not complying with the Goodyear sale program."

Each of these facts found against Atlantic is notably absent here. Far from advising dealers that their status as lessees would be in jeopardy if they did not buy substantial quantities of TBA, Texaco dealers were told exactly the opposite—namely, that they were free to handle any brands of TBA they desired—whereas Atlantic dealers suffered lease cancellations for not complying with the TBA program, no Texaco dealer ever lost his lease as the result of Texaco's TBA program. And contrasted with the effective policing by Atlantic to which Justice Clark refers at page 8 of his opinion, there has never been any finding that Texaco has at any time even attempted to police the TBA purchases of its dealers.

Commissioner Jones: What percentage, Mr. Handler, of the Texaco dealers use the sponsored TBA's?

Mr. Handler: 30 per cent of the dealers by number bought one dollar or more of the sponsored TBA. 20 per cent, by number, bought 1 dollar or more of the sponsored batteries. I propose to discuss that a little later.

Your Honors—

Commissioner Reilly: Mr. Handler, what about the conclusion of the Hearing Examiner—the conclusion of the Hearing Examiner to the effect that Texaco dealers did induce [9483] the purchase of sponsored TBA through coercion?

Mr. Handler: That finding was never affirmed by the prior Commissions that sat on this matter, and as I will demonstrate in a minute, the Court of Appeals, after scrutinizing this record, came to the conclusion that there is no substantial reliable or substantive evidence supporting that conclusion.

All I can say is that the Examiner was completely wrong.

Now, Your Honors, it is hardly a man bites dog type of argument for counsel bravely to proclaim that a record will not support a particular finding of fact. You are inured to hearing these assertions. But here you have more than my say so.

This record has been scrutinized by a reviewing court, and that court has held that coercion was not proved against the present respondent.

May I refer Your Honors to the following pages of the Circuit Court of Appeals' opinion, where the Court of Appeals holds, one, that the Commission did not find coercive tactics had been used, and that the record as a whole demonstrates the contrary—336 Fed 2d 754, at 762.

Two—that the use of coercive tactics was not proved in this case—page 763.

Three—that it is the announced policy of Texaco to respect the independence of the dealers, and, as the evidence overwhelmingly shows its practice has followed its policy—page 762.

[9484] In other words, the Circuit Court of Appeals was not relying merely upon a paper declaration of policy—it was relying upon the proofs in this record that the practice of Texaco matched its declared policy.

Four—that Texaco's dealers are quite free to accept or reject the recommendation and to handle a different line if they think it would be more acceptable to their customers. Page 763.

I could stop here on the issue of coercion, but there are additional facts which I believe you would want me to call to your attention.

Commissioner Elman: Mr. Handler, you are not arguing that we are precluded from finding that actual coercive tactics were used.

Mr. Handler: No. This record is before you, and you are free to make those findings comporting with the requirements of the Administrative Procedure Act, and the decisions of the courts—namely, the findings must be supported by reliable, substantial evidence, taking the record as a whole.

Commissioner Elman: But you recognize that the Supreme Court and the Commission itself have in effect wiped the slate clean, so far as the prior rulings are concerned—a majority of the Commission examining for the first time this record, de novo.

Mr. Handler: If Your Honor will permit me, may I [9485] restate what I said with a slight amendment. You are free, under the mandate of the Supreme Court, to the Circuit Court of Appeals, and the mandate of the Circuit Court of Appeals to you, to re-examine this record in light of the Atlantic case—to match, if you can, the facts against the rules laid down in that case, and if the facts do not support the condemnatory rules of the Supreme Court decision, you must dismiss. And I venture to believe and confidently assert that when you read this record you will find that there is no evidence here that would support a finding of coercion.

Now, let me bring to your attention three points on this coercion matter in addition to the references that I made to the opinions of the Court of Appeals.

First—and I do not believe that you know about this, and hence I am taking the time to call it to your attention. Counsel for the Commission at the trial, at Joint Appendix 2353—that is the printed record—specifically disclaimed that he was charging respondents with coercion. This was towards the end of the trial. He solemnly asserted this to the Hearing Examiner.

Second—the Commission, on the first appeal, unlike what it did in Atlantic and Shell, did not make an explicit finding of coercion in this case. The findings, when you examine these three opinions, are quite different, and I think significantly so.

[9486] Third, there is one additional fact which I desire to advert to. Texaco has 38,000 dealers. If any of them had been required against his will to handle the sponsored TBA, there should have been no difficulty in obtaining such evidence. Not a single dealer was called to the stand to give such evidence. But respondents put plenty of dealers on who gave the contrary evidence—that they were not coerced and they were not required to handle the sponsored TBA, and they were entirely free to handle any products they saw fit.

Now, it is clear from this record that Commission counsel sent out questionnaires to determine whether the dealers were forced to handle Goodrich and Firestone TBA. How do we know this? We know this because a Texaco distributor received one such questionnaire. The questionnaire plus the distributor's answer was introduced into evidence by Texaco.

We moved for a disclosure of all the answers to the questionnaires, but the Examiner refused to make this information available to us.

I can readily understand why Commission counsel, being possessed of the facts negating coercion, expressly disclaimed before the Examiner any claim of coercion against Texaco. And I refer to that Joint Appendix, JAX 429, where Your Honors will find the text of the letter written by Commission counsel to various Texaco distributors and dealers—specifically asking them whether they were forced to handle TBA. And Your Honors [9487] know that if he had received favorable responses, he would put those respondents on the stand to give such testimony. This he did not do.

Now, the second factual area stressed in the Supreme Court's opinion is the possession and exercise of economic power over dealers to require them to purchase sponsored TBA.

Commissioner Elman: Mr. Handler, am I correct in thinking that as to your first point, about coercion, when you use the word "coercion" you are thinking of what the Supreme Court on page 10 of the slip opinion characterized as direct and overt threats of reprisal—that kind of coercion?

Mr. Handler: I mean coercion in the legal sense, yes.

Commissioner Elman: In a strict legal sense.

Mr. Handler: That is correct.

Commissioner Elman: Not the kind of utilization of coercive superior economic power that was expressed in the concurring opinion?

Mr. Handler: I will go further. I do not recognize any distinction between that which is coercive and that which is not coercive. But I do recognize that coercive tactics can be expressed and they can be implied. You can imply coercion from a course of conduct.

There is no evidence of any coercion, express or implied, or however you define it.

If, however, you want to say that persuasion is [9488] coercive, then you are misusing the word "coercive." And there is nothing here to support any finding of coercion, however defined, if defined correctly, without a distortion of the concept.

By coercion I mean forcing people to do something against their will. I don't care how you do it.

Commissioner Jones: By superior economic power, such as the Supreme Court refers to here?

Mr. Handler: However you do it. You sometimes can be coerced by somebody who has inferior power. But the mere fact that you have superior power does not mean that you are exercising it, and that you are coercing anybody.

The employer has superior economic power over his employee. Nobody would say that every minute of the work day that the worker is being coerced. That power has to be exercised in order to warrant a conclusion of coercion.

Commissioner Jones: You read the Supreme Court opinion as requiring active exercise?

Mr. Handler: Precisely.

Commissioner Jones: You do not read it as talking in terms of superior economic position.

Mr. Handler: Precisely. Not only that, but the Government counsel was specific in negating that he was attacking the existence of power in the abstract. He said it was the exercise, the use of the power that made it unlawful.

Commissioner Jones: Reading page 9 of the Supreme (9489) Court opinion, they are really talking about the relative economic positions, are they not?

Mr. Handler: Oh, yes. There are places where he notes a fact. But the thrust of the opinion is the way in which the power has been used.

Commissioner Jones: What part of the opinion is that?

Mr. Handler: Well, the passages that I have read to you before, on page 14, for example.

"It is the oil company's power and overt acts towards its outlets that outlaws the sales commission plan."

Very explicit.

Commissioner Jones: He is discussing there the order, is he not?

Mr. Handler: He is explaining the ruling that is the predicate for the order.

Commissioner Jones: As I read the opinion on liability, he is talking about the economic power and leverage.

Mr. Handler: No. Page 13. "The short of it"—"The short of it is that Atlantic, with Goodyear's encouragement and assistance, has martialled its full economic power"—how?—"in a continuing campaign to force its dealers and wholesalers to buy Goodyear products."

That is exercising the power in a continuing campaign.

Commissioner Elman: When the Court refers to overt acts, it might very well have had in mind such things as the [9490] double teaming, merchandising tactics, and all the pressures and tactics that might be used in sponsoring the TBA short of threats and reprisals.

Mr. Handler: I said before you can have a congeries of facts, and you put them on the scale, and you ask yourself, does this add up to pressure, coercion, forcing people to act against their will.

We do not have double teaming here. As a mater of fact, if you take the Supreme Court opinion, and we will do this in our brief—we will show in parallel columns how the facts found there differ from the facts here.

Now, I said that the second factual area stressed in the Supreme Court is the possession and the exercise of economic power over dealers to require them to purchase sponsored TBA.

Now, the factual distinctions between Atlantic and the Texaco records are no less significant than the differences respecting coercion. Let me cite three examples.

The Supreme Court found that the most impressive evidence of the effectiveness of its exercise of its economic power was the remarkable switch of Atlantic dealers to Goodyear TBA. An Atlantic survey between 1946 and 1949 showed that 67 per cent of its dealers preferred another brand of tires, and 76 per cent another brand of batteries. Yet in 1951, within seven months after the agreement, Goodyear had signed up 96 per cent and 98 per cent respectively of Atlantic's dealers, in two (9491) of the three areas assigned to it. I am quoting from page 8.

There could be no more compelling proof of the exercise of economic power than these statistics.

Now, what are the comparable statistics as far as Texaco is concerned? Only a third of Texaco dealers carry any sponsored tires, and about a fifth carry any sponsored batteries and accessories.

As the Examiner found, none of the Texaco stations is an exclusive dealer of TBA. All those selling TBA handle nonsponsored products.

Where there is a dramatic shift from one brand to another, to the extraordinary extent disclosed by the Atlantic statistics, particularly in the face of the expression of the contrary desires of the Atlantic dealers, it would plainly be unreasonable not to infer that Atlantic had exceeded the bounds of normal salesmanship and recommendation. Per contra, where after over 20 years of the sales commission arrangement only a third of the Texaco dealers are handling the popular and extensively advertised tires of two of the four largest tire companies in America, the inference is equally plain that recommendation is not tantamount to command.

Lest there be any misunderstanding, let me make it clear that we do not deny that Texaco's resources are vastly greater than those of its dealers or distributors. But under the decision of the Supreme Court, illegality does not rest on [9492] a mere disparity of economic strength. Rather it is the use of power to force the dealers to handle unwanted goods that leads to illegality.

Now, my second example of the differences in the facts with respect to this power point comes from pages 7 and 10 of the slip opinion which explains why Atlantic was successful in compelling its dealers to purchase Goodyear TBA. And I quote:

> "Goodyear also furnished, this time at the special request of Atlantic, a list of the letters from recalcitrant dealers who refused to be identified with the Goodyear program. These lists Atlantic forwarded to its district offices for appropriate action. On one occasion a list of 46 such dealers was furnished Atlantic officials by Goodyear. All soon fell in line. This is a particularly impressive example of Goodyear's inclination to use Atlantic's power for its own benefit."

Goodrich never furnished Texaco with any list of recalcitrant dealers. The crucial fact in this case is that Texaco dealers and distributors were not required to handle sponsored products and they ultimately and freely handled nonsponsored items without any interference whatsoever.

The third factual distinction to which I would like to refer is the Supreme Court's finding that Atlantic controlled all advertising on the premises of its dealers and permitted no signs or displays other than those of sponsored product.

Precisely the contrary is the situation here.

[9423] Texaco leases did not provide for any such control. Texaco never controlled the advertising. This record is replete with proofs of advertising by Texaco dealers of a host of nonsponsored products.

Now, I turn to the next indispensable factual element, competitive effect.

The Supreme Court notes on page 11 the Commission's finding that the activity of Goodyear and Atlantic impaired competition at the three levels of the tire, battery and accessory industry—manufacturing, wholesaling and retailing.

On the basis of this finding of adverse competitive effects, the Court concluded that the Atlantic program had been proven to be analogous to a tie-in, and therefore did not require Commission consideration of evidence of economic justification of the programs.

Integral to the Court's determination of illegality was the record proofs of adverse competitive facts in Atlantic.

Now, Your Honors will recall the striking differences between the Commission's original decision in our case and its rulings in Atlantic and Shell. And that difference was that in the latter two cases it found that the operation of the sales commission plans had serious anticompetitive effects—whereas it could make no such finding in the Texaco case because the record, the Commission pointed out, contains no such evidence of competitive effects.

[9494] Finding this record insufficient, the case was remanded for further evidence on the competitive effects of Texaco sales commission agreements upon competing suppliers of tires, batteries and accessories at the manufacturing, wholesale and retail levels.

Your Honors are aware that no additional evidence on competitive effects was adduced on the remand. The self-same record which the Commission found deficient on this issue in its first opinion is before you today, and it is just as lacking in proof of anticompetitive effect now as it was then.

Now, in Atlantic the Supreme Court found a classic division of markets between Goodyear and Firestone. This does not exist here.

In Atlantic, the Supreme Court found that Atlantic dealers were required to buy from a specified supplier point. We have precisely the contrary finding here by the Examiner.

There was full line forcing in Atlantic, and this shut the possibility of the small manufacturer selling the multiplicity of other items known as accessories through Atlantic dealers. There is no such thing here.

Finally, there was the foreclosure in Atlantic, whereas here—

Commissioner Jones: Excuse me, Mr. Handler. I do not understand your full line forcing point. What was the situation in Atlantic?

[9495] Mr. Handler: In Atlantic it was found that Goodyear had refused to sell tires and batteries to Atlantic dealers unless Atlantic agreed that they would buy the full line of accessories as well. And this foreclosed the manufacturers. You do not have that here. Contrary to the finding of foreclosure in Atlantic that the wholesale in Atlantic at the wholesale and retail level, here we have a specific finding affirmed by the Court of Appeals that the dealers were free to buy any product, any item they saw fit.

Commissioner Jones: That might go to accessories. That would not have anything to do with tires and batteries.

Mr. Handler: It goes to everything here. The finding is very clear.

Commissioner Jones: Suppose there wasn't any full line forcing. How does that affect whether in fact this contract has a coercive or anticompetitive effect?

Mr. Handler: Where there was full line forcing, you eliminated Atlantic outlets from purchasers of the various accessories. You do not have that here. Therefore the Commission found in the first decision that there had been foreclosure of the small manufacturer. This you do not have here.

If Your Honors please, the time is past where mere rhetoric and unsupported contention can substitute for proven fact.

It behooves counsel supporting the complaint, if he [9496] claims that the Supreme Court invalidated the sales commission plan as a matter of law, to cite supporting chapter and verse in the opinion of the Supreme Court. If he contends that mere salesmanship and recommendation on the part of a large oil company is unlawful, again it is up to him to point specifically to any part of the Supreme Court opinion which provides any aid or comfort for that view.

If he claims that this record will support findings of coercion, misuse of economic power, and anticompetitive effect, it is up to him to demonstrate that the Court of Appeals was in error on the first two of these indispensable elements, and that the original Commission panel was in error on the third.

If he says that Texaco imposed tie-in requirements on its dealers and distributors, let him point to the specific evidence on which he relies and which he claims was ignored by the Commission and the Court.

If he speaks metaphorically of Texaco's having farmed out its putative economic power to Goodrich and Firestone, let him put before you the facts as distinguished from the purple words.

If he asserts that recommendation is tantamount to command, let him refer to the substantiating data on which he relies, conforming here as well as on all the other disputed questions of fact to the familiar and settled requirements of Universal Camera.

[9497a] It is our submission that there is lacking here the three indispensable indicia of illegality under the Atlantic ruling—no coercion, no improper exercise of power, and no anticompetitive effects.

In light of this signal failure of proof, this long pending litigation should be brought to an end by the dismissal of the complaint against Texaco and Goodrich.

According to the clock before me, Your Honors, I think I have eight minutes of my 45 for rebuttal.

Thank you very much.

Commissioner Elman: Mr Barton

Oral Argument of Edgar E. Barton,

On Behalf of Respondent B. F. Goodrich Company

Mr. Barton: If it please the Commission, I believe Professor Handler has demonstrated that the Supreme Court approved the Commission's order against Atlantic on the ground that Atlantic as a matter of massive record of proof, and indeed by its own concession, implemented its sales commission arrangements with Goodyear by coercively forcing its dealers to handle sponsored TBA. The Court relied upon coercion, not only to justify the broad remedy, but also, I submit, to define the wrong.

He has also demonstrated, I submit, that this record wholly fails to prove any such coercion by Texaco.

The predicate for the Supreme Court's upholding the order against Goodyear is similarly lacking here, and therefore [0497b] dismissal as to B. F. Goodrich is required.

Commissioner Jones: Mr. Barton, may I interrupt just a moment on this point of coercion, again. The Court relies fairly heavily on its Simpson opinion, Union Oil. And there, as I understand it, the coercive tactic was primarily existence of the lease.

Now, isn't it true that this is the same kind of coercion that the Supreme Court had in mind when it talked about Atlantic?

Mr. Barton: I think, Commissioner Jones, you have to consider that the background of the Atlantic case was that there was this vast switch-over of dealers from the Lee tires to the Goodyear tires within a period of some three months after the dealers had indicated by questionnaire before that they wanted the Lee tires.

Now, there was—nothing else could explain that, other than coercion. And that record was rampant with active overcoercion on the part of Atlantic, in which Goodyear participated to force the dealers to switch from Lee tires to Goodyear tires.

That was the vast overhanging fact of coercion that was behind the Atlantic decision.

Now, I agree with you. They referred—and that opinion is not the clearest opinion that was ever written by Justice Clark, I must say—that refers to the Simpson case. But the fact that is central to that decision is that switchover [9498] from Lee tires to Goodyear tires within a period of 90 days.

Now, there is no such fact here.

This record is absolutely barren of any evidence of coercion on the part of Texaco and is completely barren of any participation by Goodrich in coercion by Texaco.

In essence, in Atlantic the Court held that Goodyear necessarily knew, actively solicited and participated in Atlantic's coercion of its dealers. In the words of the majority opinion, at 1509, "So close was the team work of the two companies, that even with blinders on Goodyear could not have been ignorant of Atlantic's practices."

Again, at 1508—"Goodyear was no silent or inactive partner in the implementation of the sales commission plan. It did not simply sit back and passively accept whatever benefits might accrue to it from the Atlantic contract."

Again, "There was abundant evidence that Atlantic in some instances with the aid of Goodyear not only exerted the persuasion that is a natural incidence of its economic power, but coupled with its direct and overt threats of reprisal." That is 1506.

Again, at 1507—"The short of it is that Atlantic, with Goodyear's encouragement and assistance, has martialled its full economic power in a continuing campaign to force its dealers and wholesalers to buy Goodyear products."

Now, simply stated, the Court concluded that Goodyear [9499] aided and abetted Atlantic in its transgression, and that such a demonstrated propensity for harnessing and utilizing—those are the Court's words—Atlantic's powers and overt acts justified a broad order outlying Goodyear's further use of sales commission plans.

Here Texaco has not been a transgressor, and a fortiori, B. F. Goodrich cannot be an aider and abettor.

The facts of record fully support and buttress the logic of that conclusion.

First, let us examine the question of what Goodyear paid commissions for and what B. F. Goodrich pays commissions for.

Upon examination of the Atlantic record, the Court concluded that Goodyear paid Atlantic for the exercise of its economic power, coupled with "direct and overt threats of reprisal," 1506.

The record there compelled that conclusion, and Goodyear did not even offer testimony to the contrary.

The record in our case, even wholly apart from the absence of coercion by Texaco affirmatively, proves that B. F. Goodrich pays only for wholly legitimate services by Texaco, and the character of those services, together with the fact that they are absolutely essential to service station dealers, establishes the competitive and economic justification for B. F. Goodrich sales commission arrangements with Texaco and other [9500] oil companies.

Commissioner Jones: Let me ask you another question.

Is it your position that this Commission should find that the coercion here, to use your words, flowed from the economic relationship of Texaco with the service station—that as the other party of the contract, you would still not be involved in that?

Mr. Barton: I don't think, Your Honor, that there is evidence from which the Commission can find that what legally constitutes coercion flows from the relationship between Texaco and its dealers.

The facts of coercion—I want to get to that specifically—there is an absolute absence of any kind of coercion flowing from that relationship.

Commissioner Jones: So you would ignore your contract and say that this Commission must find acts of coercion by Texaco to hold Texaco, and acts of coercion by you to hold you, and you would ignore—

Mr. Barton: No. If you found in Atlantic that there was actual coercion by the oil company, in which the tire comany participated or knew of and reaped the benefit of, I take it there would be grounds for holding the tire company under the Atlantic decision. But here there are no facts upon which to base that finding of coercion by Atlantic—by Texaco. And there being no facts on which to base coercion by Texaco, there is no basis [9501] B. F. Goodrich, either.

I want to go down the list of the things which constituted coercion in Atlantic, which are not present here.

Commissioner Jones: You really stand and fall with Texaco here, then, don't you?

Mr. Barton: I think under the Atlantic decision that is true—except insofar as the Texaco contract itself is concerned, Texaco's relationship—not necessarily insofar as the other oil companies whom B. F. Goodrich has sales commission arrangements with, as to which there are no facts of record in this case.

Commissioner Elman: Aren't you also telling us that your case stands or falls depending upon whether the Commission finds in this record the same kind of crude, primitive acts of coercion which you say were used by Atlantic?

Mr. Barton: No, I am not saying that. I am not saying that you have to find the same thing. But if you examine the record and find none of the things—

Commissioner Elman: Then you say—correct me if I am wrong—as I understand your argument, and Mr. Handler's, it is that the Supreme Court decision in the Atlantic case has as a sine qua non the presence in that record of these acts of coercion found against Atlantic as to which it did not appeal, and that if we do not find in this record the same kind of blackmailing threats and so on—"If you don't buy this TBA [9502] that we sponsor, we will cut you off, we will do all kinds of terrible things to you."—if we do not find that in this record, you and Mr. Handler are arguing that we should dismiss the complaint.

Mr. Barton: Commissioner Elman, I take it that it is a settled principle of law, supported by the Supreme Court, where it said, that a sales commission plan is not illegal per se.

If it had been the rule that they were holding that a sales commission plan was illegal per se, none of that part of Justice Clark's opinion about coercion would have been in any way relevant to his conclusion.

Now, I submit that what the Supreme Court decision means in effect is that, as in many other fields of the law, a perfectly reasonable business practice can be forbidden if it is misused. I think that is the explanation of the Atlantic decision.

Commissioner Elman: You seem to be saying—and again, if I am wrong correct me—that we have to hold sales commission plans to be illegal per se if we hold that in this case there is such an inequality of bargaining power, such evidence of inequality in the relationship of the parties, that the sales commission plan would have an adverse competitive effect. That is not saying anything is illegal per se.

Mr. Barton: I think in the state of this record, where [9503] not only is coercion unproved, but the lack of coercion is affirmatively proved by—if you read the record, go through the record line by line, page by page, and read the paucity of evidence put in by counsel in support of the complaint, in support of any kind of coercion, and analyze that testimony critically, and do not accept it willy-nilly, and then read the evidence of the 50 dealers who were called by respondents to testify what influenced them in their buying of TBA—if you look at the hundreds of pages of pictures of nonsponsored TBA in the dealers' premises of leased Texaco stations, you cannot arrive at any other conclusion than that the fact of noncoercion is proved by the respondents here.

Now, therefore I say to you, Commissioner Elman, that if you hold that there is a violation here by this sales commission arrangement, you will be in effect holding the sales commission plan is illegal per se—a proposition, I submit to you, which is not supported by the Supreme Court decision and is entirely inconsistent with the Atlantic Supreme Court decision, as is, I think, demonstrated by reading both the majority opinion and the dissenting opinion.

Now, the reason for that is this.

These sales commission plans do provide a necessary service to the retail dealer. Service stations require a comprehensive, integrated and continuing program of TBA counsel and training. Individual or small marketers, up against severe [9604] competition from specialized—Sears and Roebuck Stores, big discount chains, and traditional tire dealers—the service stations and the dealers are traditionally and often inexperienced in the many ramifications of tire marketing, and they cannot devote their entire time to it. They require continuous training, advice and assistance.

To illustrate, they need help in connection with inventory control in order to minimize investment, they need help in connection with installation and service, adjustments, trade-ins, familiarity with competitive prices and products, and a host of other factors necessary to effective TBA merchandising.

All of this help must cover literally dozens of items that are included in a TBA line.

But B. F. Goodrich and its independent wholesalers and supply points and their competitors do not and cannot furnish that kind of assistance to the dealer. The sales organization of B. F. Goodrich is geared to selling to large volume TBA outlets.

After selling the B. F. Goodrich nonexclusive franchise to a retail dealer, B. F. Goodrich salesmen can only call on him once or twice a year, only occasionally.

The B. F. Goodrich supply point, like B. F. Goodrich, deal primarily with large accounts—not with the dealer, small dealers.

So far as service stations, these wholesalers spend [9506] their time in solicitation of orders, service in connection with adjustments and repairs, and quick deliveries at all hours of the small pickup orders called in by stations for TBA items not in stock but requested by a motorist.

Since their visits to the station are essentially confined to order taking, the B. F. Goodrich supply point, like other wholesalers, do not furnish the training and merchandising services and assistance essentially to make service stations viable, successful TBA outlets.

Commissioner Jones: What is the connection between the service station's need for these kind of services and the designation of a particular supplier of these products?

Mr. Barton: We do not do that, as in Atlantic.

Commissioner Jones: No, no. But you are making the argument, as I understand your argument, that somehow because the service station needs inventory assistance and so forth—

Mr. Barton: That is right.

Commissioner Jones: —you cannot supply that. Therefore the conclusion is—

Mr. Barton: My point, Commissioner Jones, is that because the service station dealer needs these kind of services in order to be an effective TBA marketer, and because neither B. F. Goodrich nor its distributors who service that dealer can supply those services, it needs the assistance of the Texaco Company whose salesmen call on that dealer every week to help [9506] them to merchandise the product.

Now, that is what we pay the sales commission for. We do not pay—B. F. Goodrich does not pay Texaco a sales commission for delivering captive dealers to it as in Atlantic—as the Commission found, as the Court of Appeals found, as the Supreme Court referred to. We pay Texaco for perfectly reasonable, acceptable, permissible services. And under those circumstances, we—where we are paying for something that is perfectly reasonable and permissible, and Atlantic was paying for something that was reprehensible, there is no basis for this Commission to say that this case is consistent with the Atlantic case, and therefore that an order should be entered here.

As the Court of Appeals, looking at this whole record, studying it in detail, said, there is no evidence to support the Commission's conclusion that the conduct found here, in this record, violates Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

There is nothing in this record consistent with what was found in the Atlantic record which led the Supreme Court, the majority of the Supreme Court, to find a violation there.

Now, as I was saying, the oil companies are the logical agencies to furnish this essential continuing dealer training. Their self-interest lies in building strong dealers. They recognize the dealer's need for the additional income from TBA and its integral role in promotion of greater sales of gasoline.

Further, they recognize that if the dealers are to [9507] survive as TBA outlets, they must have this continuing help.

Commissioner Jones: Prior to these contracts, did you sell service stations?

Mr. Barton: Did our—prior to these contracts, the evidence of record is that when the oil company is not interested in TBA—in Chicago, Mr. Chamsen, one of the complaining witnesses, was on the stand. His testimony indicated that before there was a sales commission plan with Conoco in the Chicago area, the Conoco stations were not interested in TBA, did not handle TBA, simply handled gasoline.

In other words, these plans, these sales commission plans have now been in effect for 30 years. Over that period of 30 years, as Mr. Handler pointed out, less than a third of the Texaco stations handled on the basis of buying one dollar or more a month sponsored products.

This plan has been of benefit to the service station dealers, to Texaco, and the B. F. Goodrich Company. It has not been any kind of anticompetitive effect on anybody else. It is a perfectly normal, reasonable business relationship, so long as it is not abused. And of course any kind of people can abuse fair trade and be forbidden to use it. They can abuse any perfectly normal business activity and be forbidden to use it for misuse of it.

But where as here you do not find that misuse, there is no basis for holding that it should be forbidden.

[9508] Commissioner Elman: You are saying that the services that Texaco renders to its dealers, such as inventory assistance and so on, are the kind of services that wholesalers render to retailers, and they ought to be compensated on that basis?

Mr. Barton: I am saying that they are the kind of services that the wholesalers do not have time to provide to the small service station dealers.

Commissioner Elman: The Goodrich wholesaler could not do that.

Mr. Barton: That is true.

Commissioner Elman: If a small service station dealer were now to buy from a Goodrich wholesaler rather than from Texaco, he could not get these services?

Mr. Barton: That is true.

Commissioner Elman: Why is that?

Mr. Barton: Because there are so many of them—the salesman of the wholesaler does not have the [time to] spend with the dealer to give those services. The Texaco salesmen come into the station—

Commissioner Jones: He is going to do it anyway, though, isn't he—the Texaco salesman? Texaco is going to do this for the dealers regardless of the sales commission plan or not.

Mr. Barton: Well, no, I do not know what the consequence of your holding that a perfectly reasonable business relationship has to be terminated is going to be. I do not have [9509] a crystal ball from which I can determine what will happen after that.

But what I am referring to is that these kinds of services that are given us by Texaco are not kinds of services that are found in Atlantic to be paid for by Goodyear—

Commissioner Jones: Atlantic did not give these kind of services?

Mr. Barton: Sure, but they did a lot more. I don't argue with you. If Texaco were found here to have done the kind of coercion, in addition to providing these services, that Atlantic was found to be doing, then an order would enter here, under the Supreme Court ruling.

Commissioner Jones: You claim Atlantic paid for coercion?

Mr. Barton: I claim Goodyear paid for these services plus the coercion which Atlantic was found to have engaged in and Goodyear was found to have participated in.

Commissioner Jones: We would all need a crystal ball to decide that one, I suppose.

Mr. Barton: Yes, I think so. But in this connection the oil companies incur substantial expenses in giving these services. The record here shows that Texaco's direct expenses, excluding such expenses as furnishing the station, TBA space and facilities, and use of credit cards, runs about 70 percent of the total commission. Texaco salesmen devote 15 percent of [9510] their time to these services. As I say, this is what B. F. Goodrich pays for. It is what it intends to pay for and what it does pay for. It does not pay for delivery of captive dealers to it in contradistanction to the situation in Atlantic where the Supreme Court said at 1509, "The Commission was well justified in concluding that Goodyear had in effect purchased a captive market."

The Court there repeatedly emphasized that almost 100 per cent of Atlantic's dealers signed up with Goodyear within seven months of the time that Atlantic switched. I have referred to that fact.

Commissioner Elman: If that is the crucial thing, whether it is a captive market, what difference does it make whether the captive is a coerced one or not, as long as it is captive?

Mr. Barton: Well, it was found to be captive in Atlantic because it was coerced. If you do not have coercion, there is no basis for finding it.

Commissioner Elman: You can have a captive who is not coerced.

Mr. Barton: Pardon?

Commissioner Elman: You can have a captive who is not coerced.

Mr. Barton: How can you find that there is a captive market here when only 30 per cent of the dealers handle any of [9511] the sponsored product? That was not the situation in Atlantic. All of them handled sponsored product. Part of them handled Goodyear in the territory assigned to Goodyear, and part of them handled Firestone in the territory assigned to Firestone.

Commissioner Elman: People are very frequently captives because of the situation in which they find themselves rather than because somebody is hitting them over the head. You have a captive audience right now.

Mr. Barton: That same kind of situation was in Texaco. There was no captive audience in any kind of a real sense, as in Atlantic.

Now the record here demonstrates that it is not Texaco but rather B. F. Goodrich and its wholesalers who sell the B. F. Goodrich franchise.

We had a hearing in Atlanta. Down there there were seven dealers signed up in a six-month period before the date of the hearing.

In that, we analyzed in detail the conditions under which they signed up. Six out of the seven were found by Goodrich and signed up without any prior notification from Texaco. Only one had been—had indicated he wanted to handle Goodrich, and Texaco forwarded the name to them.

The fact of the matter is that because Texaco has both Firestone and Goodrich, they do not notify the tire companies of a new station opening.

[9512] The tire company has to go out and get its own. Once it gets the dealer, then it pays Texaco for the services—perfectly legitimate services which it renders.

Commissioner Jones: You said some of these small stations did not want TBA. This 30 per cent figure—is that 30 percent of all the stations or all the stations handling TBA?

Mr. Barton: I did not say the smaller stations did not want TBA. I said that when there is not a TBA program by the oil company, the dealers do not have the know-how as to how to handle TBA. 30 per cent is of all Texaco stations, including some 8,000 of the dealers who bought from consignees. But the 30 per cent figure is solid in the record, and I do not think there can be any question of it.

Commissioner Jones: Does the record show whether all the 70 per cent handle TBA of other people?

Mr. Barton: The record shows that they do not handle TBA, sponsored TBA, and they do handle TBA.

Now, there is no evidence here of double teaming. Counsel has been unable to demonstrate to you that there was any double teaming as was found in Atlantic. The Examiner rejected contentions as to double teaming, even when characterized by counsel supporting the complaint as occasional.

Commissioner Reilly: Mr. Barton, what was the relationship between Goodrich and Texaco prior to the consignment [9513] agreement?

Mr. Barton: I don't know. It was so long ago I don't think the record shows.

Commissioner Reilly: Is there anything in the record as to why Goodrich entered into this agreement?

Mr. Barton: Yes, I think there is quite a bit. Mr. Heban's testimony was quite explicit on that—that this was a method of distributing tires through service stations which made business sense; if the tire company received services from the oil company of a perfectly legitimate nature which it paid—to pay the 10 per cent commission for. And that was the reason that it was undertaken.

Commissioner Reilly: So in a business sense, it has been advantageous to Goodrich to be under this type of an arrangement?

Mr. Barton: Certainly. Otherwise they would not pay the 10 per cent.

Commissioner Reilly: Is there anything in the record to indicate there was a purchase resale agreement with Texaco prior to the consignment?

Mr. Barton: No, there is not.

Now—

[9514] Commissioner Elman: To what extent was this an exclusive agreement?

Mr. Barton: Period?

Commissioner Elman: To what extent did the contract between Texaco and Goodrich provide for exclusivity?

Mr. Barton: No provision for exclusivity whatsoever.

Commissioner Elman: Texaco could have made the same agreement with Goodyear the next day?

Mr. Barton: And in fact did. In fact they made the same agreement with Firestone, and in 1956 made the same agreement with U.S. Rubber.

Commissioner Jones: Different territories?

Mr. Barton: No, the same territory.

Commissioner Jones: In other words, the Texaco—did the Texaco dealers have a choice of three different types of companies?

Mr. Barton: Or any tire company. They had a choice of any tire company that they wanted, any wholesaler they wanted to do business with. Texaco received sales commission if they bought from a Firestone outlet or a B. F. Goodrich outlet or U.S. Rubber outlet.

Commissioner Jones: Texaco salesmen received commissions?

Mr. Barton: Texaco got the sales commission from the tire company if they bought from any one of those outlets of any one of those tire companies.

Commissioner Elman: These are only three lines of TBA that Texaco sponsored?

[9515] Mr. Barton: So far as this record is concerned, that is true.

Commissioner Elman: What were the percentages of those three?

Mr. Barton: Do you mean——

Commissioner Elman: Goodrich had 30 per cent.

Mr. Barton: No, no. Goodrich did not. The 30 per cent figure is all sponsored lines.

Commissioner Jones: What is in the record about the Texaco salesmen? Do they get a commission?

Mr. Barton: No, the Texaco salesmen do not get the commission. The commission is paid by the tire company to the oil company for the services rendered by the Texaco salesmen given in connection with the oil company's outlets.

Commissioner Jones: Is that earmarked to the salesman in some way?

Mr. Barton: No, it is not. I am sure it is not.

Commissioner Jones: Wasn't it true in Atlantic it was?

Mr. Barton: That I am not sure of.

Commissioner Reilly: Mr. Barton, let's go back to that 30 per cent a minute. I am not sure I am clear.

Goodrich sold 30 per cent of the three sponsored——

Mr. Barton: No.

Commissioner Reilly: Goodrich sold 30 per cent of what?

[9516] Mr. Barton: The 30 per cent figure is that of all of the Texaco outlets, only 30 per cent of them bought any sponsored products more than a dollar in a given month.

Commissioner Reilly: Now, of the Texaco stations which bought sponsored products, how much of that was sold by Goodrich?

Mr. Barton: Well, there is no—you mean of particular service stations?

Commissioner Reilly: No. What is the percentage of the sponsored products sold by Goodrich? You said there were three.

Mr. Barton: I here do not know the answer to that. We will have that in the brief.

Commissioner Reilly: All right. Do you know what percentage of TBA sold by Texaco was sponsored?

Mr. Barton: What percentage——

Commissioner Reilly: What percentage—assuming that the station sold a certain percentage of TBA, how much of that was sponsored as opposed to unsponsored?

Mr. Barton: Well, the record has some figures in it that less than a majority of the TBA sold by Texaco service stations, much less, is sponsored.

Commissioner Elman: Is there a finding on all of this by the Examiner, as to the percentages?

Mr. Barton: No.

[9517] Commissioner Elman: He did not——

Mr. Barton: This is in the record, that the Examiner did not make findings on it.

Commissioner Elman: You might be very helpful to the Commission when you get around to writing your briefs if you document all this.

Mr. Barton: We will be very specific on it.

Now, the Supreme Court pointed to the fact that Goodyear furnished Atlantic with detailed reports from which Atlantic could determine the exact amount of sponsored products purchased by each Atlantic retail outlet.

Mr. Barton: All right.

I want to end up with this.

It is perfectly clear on the record that the same kind of anything similar to the activities found in Atlantic are not present here. Under those circumstances, this complaint should be dismissed after some ten years against both Texaco and Goodrich.

Commissioner Elman: You are not suggesting that all these practices have been abandoned or anything like that, have you?

Mr. Barton: I am suggesting that there is a sales commission plan and it is perfectly a reasonable business relationship [9518] if it is not misused, as it was in Atlantic, and under those circumstances, the complaint should be dismissed.

Commissioner Elman: But the case is not stale in the sense that the practices to which it relates have long been discontinued or anything like that.

Mr. Barton: If you mean that the sales commission plan has been discontinued, the answer is no.

Commissioner Elman: All right.

Oral Argument of Peter J. Diss, on Behalf of the Federal Trade Commission

Mr. Diss: If the Commission please, it seems that maybe memories have dimmed over the years as to what the facts of this record actually show.

To start with, I am in rather an unenviable position of telling you, as I hate to do that exactly what you, Mr. Elman, pointed out is the same thesis that I have pushed in this case from its inception, and that is to say it has never been contended that you had to have this, as you put it, crude, primitive coercion. Truthfully, I thought that that particular ghost had been laid to rest in my reply brief, reply to respondents' proposed findings when, as a grasping at straws, they claimed that I apparently misled them by saying that I did not claim there was coercion in this case.

I won't take too much time on it because—I will certainly have it in my brief to you. But the record is definitely [9519] clear that before these hearings started, prehearing conferences, and after they had started, long before they had continued, I made it perfectly clear that if coercion was found, if overt coercion was found, that the complaint in this case would certainly cover it. But it has always been my position that we were not claiming the overt, crude type of coercion. And on the very last day of hearings—I think it was December 10th, 1958—I probably did put my foot in my mouth when I stated that "I certainly do not agree that there was ever any contention that there is coercion in this case."

I certainly should have said overt coercion. I thought that had been explained, but apparently there is still a glimmer of hope in respondents' eyes on that one.

Commissioner Elman: When you say coercion or overt coercion you mean the kind of direct and overt threats of reprisal that the Supreme Court referred to on page 10 of the slip opinion, in the Atlantic opinion?

Mr. Diss: I would like to go back, if I may, to the opinion of the Seventh Circuit.

Now, that in my opinion states precisely—

Commissioner Jones: This case or the Atlantic case?

Mr. Diss: This will be the Seventh Circuit's opinion in the Goodyear-Atlantic case. I am sorry I only have a slip opinion—

I do not have the exact citation. But at page 13—"Atlantic contended that its influence over its dealers to purchase [9520] sponsored TBA short of force, threat or intimidation is lawful, that it may recommend high quality TBA to its dealers, and that such action serves a legitimate business purpose in the promotion of the sale of gasoline. This would be a persuasive argument except for the dealer's economic dependency upon the oil company. In that setting, recommendation is tantamount to command. Overt practices are as efficient as overt action. And sophisticated methods of pressuring the dealers into carrying sponsored TBA are as effectual as expressed covenants and open threats."

Commissioner Jones: What are the facts in this record, counsel? What are you relying on?

Mr. Dias: I am relying on the Seventh Circuit finding that the heart of this case, and the corresponding finding by the Supreme Court, that the source of leverage, and also listed as additional source of leverage, of a lease and sales agreement.

Under those agreements, Texaco retains—the leases are for one year, and they contain the normal housekeeping—I should not say normal—they contain housekeeping, equipment load, and alteration privileges.

In my opinion, and I think it has been found by the Supreme Court in the Simpson case, those are the—as they have said, the heart of the case.

Under the circumstances of those lease arrangements, the dealer was certainly bound and tied to Texaco and subject completely to Texaco's activities or demands.

[9521] Commissioner Jones: Well, assume that, counsel. What is in the record on what Texaco did to "recommend" the use of sponsored TBA?

Mr. Dias: Well, I think the Seventh Circuit also talked in terms of—or it was the Supreme Court, actually, that talked in terms of—found the Seventh Circuit's findings as to the components of the sales commission system. And that consisted of advance notice, training school, double teaming, reporting techniques, minimum inventory, advertising assistance, and the restriction of credit cards to sponsored TBA.

Commissioner Jones: I think I do not make myself clear. Are you talking now of Texaco or Atlantic?

Mr. Dias: Well, in the Goodyear-Atlantic case——

Commissioner Jones: I want to know about Texaco.

Mr. Dias: Yes, ma'am. I pointed out the components of the sales commission plan that both the Supreme Court and the Seventh Circuit found existed in the Atlantic-Goodyear situation, and I am saying to you now that the same situation and the same factors exist in this case. I might mention that in preparing this, I have compared the facts in the Atlantic-Goodyear case with the facts in the Texaco-Goodrich case, and where I refer to the facts found by the Court, or the indicia of this economic power in the Goodyear-Atlantic case, I am saying to you now that I will duplicate that by reference to facts in the Texaco-Goodrich case.

[9522] Commissioner Reilly: Well, even though you said that you did not base your case on any overt coercion, you did present evidence, did you not, that some dealers testified that they had been pressured.

Mr. Dias: I am satisfied of that, yes, sir. As I say, we have not agreed all through this thing. But I think I can convince you that there is overt coercion in this.

Let's take the very first item which the Courts considered to be the components of the sales commission system, and that is the advance notice.

Now, this may not be the crude, overt type, but it is the subtle, plodding type of coercive activity.

Under the advance notice, when a dealer applies for a station, and before he moves into it, the Texaco people advise him that Goodrich and Firestone have fine products, and he would be well advised to stock his station with one or the other of those products. They convince him that a service station operator just cannot exist without TBA. The usual cost of the stock in inventory is somewhere between $5,000 and $7,000.

By instructions to their own sales people, and in practice, Texaco notifies Goodrich and/or Firestone that here is a new station that is opening up, here is the dealer's name and—or prospective dealer's name—and before that man gets anywhere near his station—we have an instance of the man having been contacted three weeks before he got his station—the rubber [9523] companies are in to see the prospective lessee, they have an opportunity to push their product, and as a matter of fact the Texaco people introduce the prospective lessee on many occasions to the rubber company employees.

Commissioner Jones: Are there findings on this? As I understand respondents' argument here, they claim this is factually not true and not present in this case.

Mr. Diaz: That is why I mention the fact that apparently memories have dimmed over the years.

Commissioner Jones: In other words, your briefs will document this.

Mr. Diaz: Yes, ma'am. They certainly will.

They then talk about training schools.

In the Texaco-Goodrich case, there is not too much along the line of training schools as such. However, it is clear on the record that when they do put in a lessee, a prospective lessee, through any sort of training, it is in a station where there is nothing but sponsored products promoted. In addition to that, they coach the dealer to the extent of showing him pictures at home. Their entire thrust is in connection with the promoting of the sale that is the business of convincing the lessee that there is only Goodrich or Firestone. Everything is emphasized—I mean every thrust is emphasized on the sponsored product.

The Texaco instruction, incidentally, on the opening of [9524] a new station is as follows:

"It is important that the tire company salesmen be notified in advance of our intention to nominate a new account, and that he be requested to contact the account."

The benefit of this—Goodrich's own vice president agreed that it is a great help to be given the operator's name. A Firestone representative stated that this is the best time to get close to those guys, because if you can get them before competition does, you get them buttoned up.

On the double teaming that respondents claim is not in this record—it amazes me, because one of their own witnesses testified that a Firestone man—testified that Texaco salesmen accompanied him 15 to 20 percent of the time. There is evidence in there that on call the Texaco salesmen will accompany the rubber people. This again is something I can and will brief thoroughly for you. I think there is ample evidence in this record of the double teaming.

As a matter of fact, as I mentioned before, even before they move into their station there is a form of double teaming in that the Texaco salesman brings the rubber salesman, the sponsored rubber salesman, around to meet the new dealer.

Now, that is a form of double teaming.

The competing supplier, on the other hand, who did not have that benefit and called on stations commented that "When the Texaco salesman is there in company with the rubber salesman, [9525] if that is not pressure, I don't know what it is."

Commissioner Jones: Counsel, how do you answer respondents' argument that be that as it may, all these facts assume they exist, nevertheless it was not very successful. Where is the evidence of economic pressure when they only succeeded with 30 per cent of the dealers?

Mr. Dias: Well, perhaps I can answer that better this way. You recall in the Atlantic-Goodyear case the Supreme Court, I believe it was, found that over a five-year period there were $55 million worth of sales under this sales commission plan—that was a six-year period—and over a five-year period in the Texaco-Goodrich case there had been something like close to a quarter of a million dollars' worth of sales. As a matter of fact, the combined commissions that Texaco received over that period of time was just about or almost 50 percent of the actual sales of TBA in the Atlantic-Goodyear case. And that, I think, is significant.

Now as to these 30 per cent—if you are talking about the percentage of dealers that are buying the product, frankly, I do not recall this 30 per cent figure. I would not contest it, because we will brief it, and there has always been a real contest between us as to how you compute percentages.

But there is one point that should be borne in mind. Texaco has about 38,000 stations—roughly that [9526] figure. That includes this 8,000 that Mr. Barton told you that are normally not considered in this TBA arrangement because they in turn buy from distributors or consignees, so that would lower your figure to 30,000, 31,000. Then out of that figure you have to deduct your "DD" stations which majority, if not most, are not suitable for TBA sales—restaurants, garages and one thing or another—they are just not the ideal TBA type of service station.

That is not to say that there are not some contract stations which are TBA potentially—they have it—and there are some of them.

But among the lessees—they incidentally—the contract stations make up somewhere around 16,000 or 17,000 of this remaining 18,000—23,000 figure.

Now, among the lessees—and I think this is an earmark of some of the problems in this case—there are some, we don't know how many—the figures were impossible to obtain, apparently—but among those roughly 13,000, there are lessees who are not TBA potential and consequently are not recommended.

Also, dealers who are not recommended or not accepted by Goodrich—and this goes for Firestone—are those whose location are in conflict with other distributors in the area. That is to say—and respondents among the 59 dealers they brought in had dealers who probably announced that they were not carrying Goodrich or Firestone TBA. But ultimately there was—[9527] it was developed there was another Goodrich supply point, either a store or a franchise operator, one thing or another, within a block of this station, or it was a tiny town that certainly could not support more than two distributors of any particular product.

Now, that, too, is an unknown figure, but it is a fact of life—that Goodrich, in other words, and Firestone also do not accept each dealer that is recommended for those reasons—that they could conflict with already established distribution.

We do not know what that figure is. We have tried to get some breakdown, but those figures are hard to get.

Along that line—I am not implying that respondents refused to give the figures. The case was brought in 1956, and I think it is significant to note that the override commission plan started with Goodrich in 1940. The question was asked whether or not they had changed over from purchase and resale, and the record only shows that prior to 1940 Goodrich had been—I am sorry—Texaco had been experimenting with different forms of TBA supply, and in 1940 finally devised and entered into the agreement with Goodrich providing for the sale of commission contracts. And I think, if you will keep that in mind, you will understand why the evidence in the Atlantic-Goodyear case is so much stronger when it comes to the crude, overt type of coercion.

Goodyear-Atlantic commenced their operation in—I [9528] think they negotiated in the latter part of 1950, and I think that the man actually commenced in March of 1951.

There are cases, I think I have mentioned before, issued in January of 1956, but obviously our investigation started earlier.

If I recall, I think the record demonstrates that our investigation probably started in around 1952 or 1953.

So you can see that in the investigation, or when the investigation occurred, the rubber hose marks were still very, very apparent in the Goodyear-Atlantic market.

There was no difficulty finding the stations and the operators who had been horse-whipped and forced into line.

The situation, or the change-over from purchase resale to sales commission, that was apparent—they could not get away from that. We were in there early enough to get the evidence of that.

To begin with, as far as this record shows, Texaco never was in the purchase resale, or at least as far as we know they were not. And so you have a brand-new fresh practice insofar as Atlantic-Goodyear was concerned that merely by the passage of time we could not hope to match in the Texaco-Goodrich situation.

But again, I do not think you need that. I think that is only a matter of degree.

One other thing—I may as well tell you now—[9529] that you are not going to find here. You are not going to find the division of territory in the Texaco-Goodrich arrangement that you had in Atlantic-Goodyear. In Atlantic-Goodyear it was almost laughable. They had Goodyear sponsored on one side of the street, Firestone on the other. Not quite that bad.

But you don't have that here.

In this case, you find Texaco is willing to accept a commission no matter where the sales are made, who is making them, or how many are selling to them.

The record does show that the three rubber companies are in. They are sponsored. And I think even that in itself is highly suspect.

Certainly if an operator has any sense at all, he, I suppose, would buy the popular brands of any products. In Texaco, if a lessee chooses Firestone or Goodrich or U.S. Royal—and we do not know where that is going to end—they are collecting a commission.

But at any rate, to get back to——

Commissioner Elman: Suppose Texaco were to announce that it would make this arrangement with any TBA producer?

Mr. Dial: You know, I think they would love to do it.

Commissioner Elman: And in consideration for these services which Texaco would render, both to its dealers and to the TBA suppliers, it would request 5 per cent or whatever it is commission. Now, under that arrangement, assuming it was taken [9530] advantage of by a number of TBA manufacturers, would any one TBA producer be favored necessarily?

Mr. Dias: Well, I suppose not. But the oddity in this case is that in trying to walk this tightrope that Texaco has in explaining what it actually does to earn its commission, it has stated that whatever it does, it does for any brand of TBA. So then—because TBA is so important to their service stations, that a dealer cannot survive unless he has TBA. And so on the one hand they would have you believe that everything they do, all the encouragement they give their dealers, and all the ideas they give them for sponsoring, stocking and selling TBA applies across the board to all sellers.

Now, if that is the case, it seems as though Firestone and Goodrich are a couple of philanthropists. They do not have to do that, apparently. But I do not believe that for a minute. I think the thing that is selling this TBA for Firestone and Goodrich is merely this hunting license, this 10 percent commission for going in there and talking to their dealers. That is all in the world that they are being paid for. Because—Mr. Barton has said that Texaco does most of the selling. At least he said that one minute. I think the next he said something else.

But the fact is and the record shows that Mr. Hoban, their vice president, general manager of merchandising said, "We, Goodrich, actually do the selling. We rely on Texaco for [9531] something else—they keep the people stirred up during the year" or some other such thing. "But we, Goodrich, actually do the selling." And then when you read the testimony of Mr. Grelecki, who was questioned along these lines, he is a Goodrich distributor, and you find he as a Goodrich distributor has all the headaches. He does all the work.

So it is hard to tell who is doing what for whom and who gets the 10 percent.

Commissioner Elman: What happens to the idea of a captive market if you have nonexclusive sales commission agreements with a large number of TBA suppliers? The dealers of a particular oil refinery do not become captive, do they, in that situation?

Mr. Dias: They are captive to the extent that the boss is telling them—"This is what we think you should carry," and under the circumstances I do not think they have too much choice. Sure you are going to find some dealers who are pretty bull-headed about things and they refuse to go along. It is just bound to happen in an organization that big. But I think they play the percentages, and they know that the average lessee is going to be willing to live the easy life, and go along with the recommendation.

Commissioner Reilly: What if Texaco took a survey and they found that their stations, on an average, preferred these seven brands of TBA, and they entered into consignment agreements with these seven groups?

[9532] Mr. Dias: Consignment or commission agreements?

Commissioner Reilly: Commission—excuse me. Would that be wrong?

Mr. Dias: Well, of course, you are posing something that has not happened, and I can only judge by what happened in Atlantic-Goodyear.

I think if there was an eighth company that would promise to give Texaco a little bit more, I think they would wind up with the eighth company. As in Atlantic, 60, 70 percent of the dealers wanted to stay put.

Commissioner Reilly: Let's say they had eight companies, and they were using their economic power over their dealers to force the dealers to take one of those eight companies. The dealers had a choice of eight. Is that all right, or is that wrong?

Mr. Dias: Well, I don't know. I don't think I can answer that. Certainly the bind is less if they have eight, because if you talk about eight different rubber companies, for example, you are touching on just about everything that is in the business of any account. I don't know what the situation would be there.

Commissioner Jones: How many did they have in this case?

Mr. Dias: They have three. We started off with Goodrich and Firestone. We know about those two. And then later [9533] they started an arrangement with U.S. Royal.

Commissioner Jones: Anything in the record on the comparative prices to the dealers of sponsored and nonsponsored TBA?

Mr. Dias: Very little—very little. I can think only of a situation in Chicago—the witness from the Perry Tire Company indicated—of course this is hard to gauge. They were selling Goodrich and I think Firestone take-offs, and the take-offs—somebody buys a new car, rolls it into the garage, and takes off the blackwall and puts on white walls, and the tires are practically new. I don't think that would quite fit in. I don't know of anything offhand. If there is, I will certainly look. But I do not recall anything as to prices in this case.

Commissioner Elman: What was the number of TBA suppliers in the Atlantic-Goodyear case?

Mr. Dias: Designated supply points?

Commissioner Elman: No. Did Atlantic make the same sales commission plan arrangement with other TBA companies besides Goodyear?

Mr. Dias: Yes—Firestone.

Commissioner Elman: Just Firestone?

Mr. Dias: Yes.

Commissioner Elman: There are two in that case and three here.

[9534] Mr. Dias: Well, two in each as they started off, but ultimately three here.

Commissioner Reilly: In the Atlantic case, were not the Firestone and Goodyear territories divided?

Mr. Dias: They divided territories in that case.

Commissioner Reilly: So in effect in a given area there was only one?

Mr. Dias: That is correct, that is correct. So that you had an entirely different situation there in that respect. But again, as I say, that is a matter of degree, because in a situation of that sort you have added to your nonsponsored sellers of TBA products—you also have one who nominally is a sponsored product, but not sponsored in that particular area. And that is a situation in that case.

Commissioner Elman: Well, do you think that we could make—we could properly make in this case the same conclusion that was made in the Atlantic-Goodyear case, where the Supreme Court said that the Commission was well justified in concluding that Goodyear had in effect purchased a captive market?

Mr. Dias: I do not——

Commissioner Elman: Now, has Goodrich in effect purchased a captive market if there are other lines of TBA that are sponsored by Texaco?

Mr. Dias: Well, two things to bear in mind.

First, Goodrich was the first in this with Texaco, [9535] as far as I know. So from 1940 to about 1943 it was Goodrich alone.

In 1943 they entered into a contract with Firestone—Texaco entered into the contract with Firestone. So you have—to the extent that Goodrich has bought the control and economic power of Texaco in order to get these stations, I would say yes, it does fit into the same thing. I do not think the fact that there are two changes the situation to any—in any material respect.

Commissioner Reilly: Well, Mr. Barton is going to give us figures on the amount of sponsored TBA products sold to Texaco stations by Goodrich—the amount of the whole sponsored TBA products sold by Goodrich. I wonder if you could do the same thing.

Mr. Dias: I intend to. I have done it before. The figures are here. As I say, there has always been some question as to who have come up with the proper figures. But we will have them in there.

Commissioner Reilly: Before we go any further, while we are talking about what you are going to do in your brief, I notice that Justice Goldberg, in his dissent, made a statement regarding the Texaco-B. F. Goodrich case—that is on page 3 of his dissent, I believe—saying that the Commission "expressly held illegal the TBA sales commission arrangement between Texaco and Goodrich without analysis of the relationship between Texaco [9536] and its dealers." I would like to have you cover that—if it is so or not so.

Mr. Dias: Well, I don't think that is so at all. I think the heart of the relationship is in the lease arrangement, and together with the sales agreement.

Now the leases, as I mentioned before, are for one year and—let me just step back one minute.

Texaco does not own all the properties that it leases to its operators. It leases many of those—many of those stations are leased—many of the properties are leased by Texaco from third parties and then in turn re-leased to operators in some instances may be those who actually own the property to begin with.

But in analyzing the leases in this case, bear in mind now that here is Texaco, a lessee of property from third parties, which they intend to dispose of some other way. You read those leases and you will find that every provision in that lease favors Texaco as a lessee.

Now, the normal practice certainly is, or the normal occurrence is that the lessor of property is the dominant party. Certainly anything, any odds that favor anyone in a situation of that sort run towards the lessor. But that is not true in connection with property that Texaco leases from third parties.

Now, when Texaco in turn re-leases that property and property that they own outright, you will find that it and behold, [9537] once again the lease—all the terms of the lease run in Texaco's favor.

Now, we pointed that out at some stage of this proceeding and the reply was sort of funny. Texaco said—that is not unnatural, "but those are our lease forms." So if the party just gets in there and prints their own lease forms, I take it they can be the dominant party in any transaction.

Well, I think—I do not think that is true.

But at any rate, in addition to having everything run in their own favor, you will find that although the lease is run for a year, and subject to termination on thirty day notice either at the end of the year or whatever the period is—you will find that there are other provisions in there that definitely give Texaco at its option, strictly by its own arbitrary determination, the right to cancel out if they see fit.

Now, there are many reasons—and I can get to them right now.

Commissioner Reilly: If you are worried about answering my question, I just suggest that you answer that, and answer that question of the Supreme Court dissent in your brief.

Mr. Dias: I had that in mind, yes sir; and I can belabor that for half the time that is remaining to me because I think the leases—in fact, it is not original with me, certainly. The courts have said it.

These leases and sales agreements—the petroleum sales agreements are the heart of the case. They are the source [9538] of the leverage.

The sales agreement runs concurrently. And this sales agreement deals with the sale of petroleum products. They run concurrently.

Commissioner Elman: You sound as if you agree with Mr. Justice Steward, who also said the relationship between the refiner and the dealers was at the heart of the case, and that it did not make any difference what particular plan was used, so long as that relationship existed—any plan of TBA which the refiner sponsored was going to have an unfair competitive advantage over every other.

Mr. Dias: You know, if I may state my own personal views—I know that the phrase, "per se" is almost nasty. But in my own opinion, I think under the sales commission plan I believe that it is per se illegal for an oil company to deal in TBA, and for many reasons.

Commissioner Reilly: If that per se illegality is based upon the relationship between the dealer and his refiner, then doesn't that also hold true for the purchase resale plan?

Mr. Dias: It would appear so on the surface. But let us just point this out.

Commissioner Elman: You are not saying that the sales commission or anything else is illegal per se. What you are saying is the relationship between the gasoline refiner and his dealers is illegal per se. That is what you are really [9539] saying.

Mr. Dias: Well, I don't know if I want to go that far.

Commissioner Elman: Because you are saying the essence of this thing is in that relationship, and not in the particular form of the distribution plan. What difference does it make whether it is sales commission plan or a purchase resale or anything else, so long as you have that inequality of bargaining power you are going to have a captive market. If you have a captive market what difference does it make how you sell that captive market?

Commissioner Reilly: You would not object to a purchase resale plan where the gasoline refiner purchased tires from eight to ten tire—battery accessory manufacturers—even though they had economic power over their station.

Mr. Dias: Well, if I may again—and this is my own personal thought—if we had the authority, if we could write the order——

Commissioner Elman: You won't have that opportunity, believe me. You can make suggestions, but you won't be writing any order.

Mr. Dias. It would be my thought that the oil company should be out of TBA entirely.

Commissioner Reilly: How about the problem that Justice Goldberg is worried about? Should they be out of it entirely or only out of it in regard to large refining or [9540] integrated station operations? How about—in this case——

Mr. Dias: The amicus that Mr. Justice Goldberg——

Commissioner Reilly: Pertaining particularly to this case. As I recall, there are three companies—Jenney and Shell American——

Mr. Dias: There are a total of five other oil companies besides Texaco.

Commissioner Reilly: But there are some fairly small ones.

Mr. Dias: I believe that is true.

Commissioner Reilly: Justice Goldberg seemed worried as to whether the order should cover the Goodyear—well, the tire, battery and accessories manufacturers relationship with the small companies as well as the larger.

Mr. Dias: In my opinion it should. I do not see any reason for an oil company, small or large, to be in the TBA business under the sales commission methods of selling TBA for only one reason.

Commissioner Reilly: What if Jenny Petroleum, if I am saying it correctly, had no relationships with their stations—if they had stations—such as Texaco has?

Mr. Dias: Well, that is along the lines of the comment that the majority made in the Supreme Court. I recognize that. But truthfully I do not know what marketing oil company does not have this type of arrangement with its dealers.

[9541] Commissioner Reilly: We just heard three weeks of that.

Mr. Dias: Sir?

Commissioner Reilly: We have the advantage of having heard three weeks of that.

Commissioner Elman: We know that some oil companies do sell some retailers without any kind of string attached—they just sell them. There are jobbers and there are other forms of distributors, other kinds of distributors.

Now, suppose you have an oil company like that,—just somebody who sells gasoline to an independent businessman who is a retail seller of gasoline. Now, is Goodrich to be barred from entering into a sales commission arrangement like that?

Mr. Dias: Since I was ignorant of any other method of selling this—the Supreme Court has said this order in Atlantic-Goodyear, as they see it, does not preclude Goodyear from entering into an arrangement with an oil company that does not have the same type of leverage over its operators, or whatever type of type they sell to.

Commissioner Reilly: And they said that they would have to come back in and ask us to change the order. But now we have the advantage that if we are going to write an order—to leave that out now. Do you have any recommendations on that?

Mr. Dias: Do I have any recommendation?

Commissioner Reilly: Yes.

[9542] Mr. Dias: I would say leave it in. I think that—

Commissioner Elman: When in doubt, leave it in.

Mr. Dias: You know, I would like—I have been tangling with Goodrich and Texaco so long I feel I have an affinity in their interest. And I know that over the years—I have seen some of their reports—they do very well. I just feel like I would like to share in those profits myself. I would like to declare myself in.

But you know something—there is no guarantee under our system of free enterprise, there is no guarantee that anybody can get into a market, a particular market, or if he gets in that he is going to make a success.

Certainly the most favorable business to be in—I mean the best chance you have of making money is at the oil company level in the TBA business, because you do nothing and you get all this money. It's wonderful.

Commissioner Jones: Well, counsel, isn't the vice of this arrangement, as the Supreme Court put it, was some element of coercion, regardless of how you define that. Now, as I read the Supreme Court decision in Atlantic they found those elements of coercion not only in direct activity, but also in the economic relationship of the major and the service station.

Now, if you have no economic relationship, such as would give the supplier this kind of economic leverage, inequality, [9543] bargaining power, and you have no coercive act, then I assume such a sales commission plan would not be illegal. But if your find either one of those two elements, either coercion as a result of an economic disparity relationship or coercive activity, you would then find an illegality.

Mr. Diss: I think that is true. But again my own philosophy is this.

If a man wants to get into the TBA business, let him get in the business. I don't understand what he has to offer if he is not in the business.

Commissioner Jones: I am not sure that is relevant, counsel, to whether these products have been imposed on unwilling purchasers, which I think is the vice of this arrangement. I think this is what the Court is saying when it says it is not per se illegal. It says it is illegal if it in fact coerces people to do something that they otherwise would not want to do, and therefore it keeps out nonsponsored TBA manufacturers.

Now, if it is not keeping them out, it is not illegal.

Mr. Diss: Well, insofar as this record is concerned, I think you will find the competitive effects of this.

We had 20—I think maybe about 40 representatives of 20 supply points of competing TBA products. It is just almost unanimous. They all testified that they would go into a Texaco station, try to sell them, and invariably they made no sales. Certainly they could not make initial purchases.

Commissioner Jones. They were at a competitive dis- [3544] advantage because there was some element on the dealer that made him feel he ought to prefer the sponsored TBA.

Mr. Dias. Exactly so.

Commissioner Jones: But if the dealer does not feel that, then there would not be any competitive effect.

Mr. Dias. That is possible. I am so ingrained in this one, where there was all that, that I do not really know what answer to give you as to the other situation. As I say up until this minute I did not know there were other arrangements.

Commissioner Jones. I wanted to bring you back to this record, because it seemed to me you were going into a generality, where you personally regarded these arrangements. And I do not think that is the material point of what the Supreme Court is saying, what is in this record. But I take it your argument is there is some element of coercion—whether it springs out of the relationship or out of direct activity.

Mr. Dias. Exactly. This record is rampant with it. And we will have no difficulty in pointing it out. It obviously is going to be a lot easier in the briefs to get each of these points, and we will certainly take care of that.

Now, another component of the sales commission system were these credit card arrangements. If you recall, there was a period when Texaco did not restrict the use of its credit cards only to the sponsored TBA products. I think that came about [3545] because of war-time restrictions, one thing and another. But at any rate, there is a period when they did not restrict it to sponsored TBA. But before and after that period, and up to date, as far as I know, the purchases of sponsored TBA alone are approved by credit cards. In other words, theoretically they cannot—a dealer cannot sell nonsponsored products via credit card.

Now, respondents submit point to the fact that some of their dealer witnesses said: Yes, they will charge it, a nonsponsored product. But I think when you read the evidence you will find that they did it with a great deal of trepidation.

One dealer for example said, "When I sell a nonsponsored product and I put it on a credit card, I either do not label it,"—one said, "I don't designate what it is, or another one said, "I call it a Firestone or a Goodrich tire, because I know what it says on the back."

Now, in the credit card itself, there were facts developed in that area that demonstrated again this overbearing control that Texaco has on its dealers.

One of their own witnesses, a man by the name of Bailey, down in Norfolk, was obliged to make good on a couple of credit sales—incidentally, he carried nonsponsored TBA products in his station. He was obliged to make good on a couple of credit sales that had bounced. The harsh part of it was that the company said that the credit cards had expired, or they [9546] had withdrawn them but they never notified Mr. Bailey and as far as he knew—he had been selling these people earlier by a credit card—and it had been all right. In other words, Texaco cancelled its credit card and did not notify the dealer and when the credit bounced they nevertheless made Bailey pay for the amount owed.

There was another situation of that out in Omaha, as I recall. And so again, it just demonstrates this tremendous power that Texaco has and exercises.

Commissioner Jones: You are arguing that the dealer might have been free to buy nonsponsored TBA, but he would have to pay some kind of a price for it—to wit, he could not use the credit cards and some of the other facilities.

Mr. Dias: I think—and I think the evidence is pretty clear—that the dealers, generally speaking, were aware of the limitations on the credit card and I think that perhaps there were some—there was some bootlegging of nonsponsored on occasion. But certainly they covered it if they could.

Commissioner Jones: The policy was that you could not charge nonsponsored.

Mr. Dias: That is right. And the dealers were so notified in no uncertain terms. They even went to the trouble of explaining to them that in the event they charge something that is not authorized it would never stand up in court—[9547] "We cannot enforce the payment of the credit." And I think that that is—that served the purpose of causing most dealers to sell only sponsored products by credit card.

I think there was some mention made of policy letters. I will touch on that just lightly, because time is running short. Texaco, coincidentally, after each of several significant court actions put out so-called policy letters. But they were all addressed to general management people, and it was passed down the line to the salesmen, but it stopped there. Never once did they show those letters to a dealer. They never showed them to the dealers. And if that was policy—in other words, I don't know what it had to be repeated significantly after various court actions—significant court actions.

Number two, I don't know why, and the record does not show why they were not shown to dealers.

Commissioner Reilly: Did you present any evidence as to the relative positions in a gas station or in a dealer's station—the relative positions of sponsored and nonsponsored TBA products?

Mr. Dias: We had testimony along this line—and this may not be completely in answer to your question—for example, one of Texaco's own salesmen in Chicago said that out of 89 dealers in his area, 89 Texaco dealers in his area, he only knew of one that did not carry Goodrich or Firestone. Now, that does not go to the quantity of the various products in the [9548] station.

Commissioner Reilly: That is interesting information. But the thing that I was interested in was this. For instance, is the Goodrich and Firestone tire out in front, and the other tire or battery or accessory in the back room?

Mr. Dias: Well, we have one instance in Chicago that I can recall offhand. Again, this was one of respondent's witnesses, a Mr. Grelecki, who was a Goodrich distributor. He testified that—and his figures, too, are significant—he estimated that, I believe, 75 per cent of the dealers in his area carried—Texaco dealers carried either Goodrich or Firestone, and in the stations to whom he sold Goodrich products, some of them also bought Firestone but kept those in the back room. That's the testimony of one of respondents' witnesses.

Mr. Barton referred to the testimony of 59 dealers that were used in the defense by Goodrich, and he has urged you to read their testimony. I can do nothing more than urge you to read their testimony myself. These 59 dealers came from various scattered locations throughout the country. We joked about it many a time—I could see them arm in arm going from the West Coast to the East Coast looking for these dealers, and they came up with 59. I think you will find when you analyze the evidence that what they produced was not much. They would have dealers from small towns, where there were either no other Texaco stations or they had dealers who were in small towns where there were other [9549] distribution points near them.

In addition, from the mouths of their own dealers we developed evidence of the coercive power, again, of Texaco.

Down in hot Dallas in the summertime they were called up, they wanted to interview these people, and they called the dealers up and said, "We would like to interview you—come down to the office," so they went down.

Now, as to that particular comment on the dealers—I prefer to rely on the Seventh Circuit, where they claimed that the dealer testimony introduced in the Atlantic case, where 13 dealers were introduced—Atlantic claimed that that was not sufficient. In the Seventh Circuit, they said, "We disagree."

Commissioner Elman: What page is that?

Mr. Dias: That is at 401. That is 331 Fed. 2d at 401. The Seventh Circuit said, "We disagree. The evidence relating to overt coercion tactics, although not extensive, must be considered with the testimony of the witnesses representing competing suppliers to the effect that the dealers felt that if they did not carry sponsored TBA they risked reprisals. Also to be considered are the policing tactics of Atlantic salesmen and the surveillance of the so-called phantom customer inspectors."

Now, and let me continue,—"Moreover, it should be noted that the Examiner in considering the testimony of the dealers who testified for Atlantic recognized that these witnesses were under considerable pressure because they were naturally [9550] interested in not jeopardizing the renewal of their leases."

The Examiner made the same finding in this case. The phantom customer inspector is one element missing—the only element missing. We did not have anybody in Texaco—they did not employ a "phantom customer inspector." But they did inspect. And they did keep them under surveillance.

As a matter of fact, Texaco said it was not unusual for salesmen to go out and look around the station and see whether or not they were carrying sponsored TBA.

Now, that is a sort of a form of a white list. They did not go in to see if they were carrying nonsponsored. They went in to see if they were carrying sponsored. It amounts to the same thing.

Commissioner Reilly: There is nothing in this case like the Atlantic case of a list of noncompliers?

Mr. Dias: I don't quite go along with that. In Norfolk, where incidentally the incidence of adherence to the program was very high—I think 90 per cent of the dealers down there carried sponsored TBA—at one point there was—and there is in the record—a notice to the home office by the local man to the effect that there are, I think it was, 48 dealers not carrying sponsored TBA, and I think they also noted that there were something like 51 who did not carry TBA at all. But the list of those not carrying sponsored TBA was sent to the home office.

[9551] When respondents put in their defense, they brought in about five of those dealers. One is this Mr. Bailey. And the names of the other four escape me.

But the sum and substance of the testimony of those other dealers, some of them, most of them, was that they were in small, isolated areas, or they were the only dealer in town, or that Goodrich or Firestone supply points were near them.

As I say, it is unfortunate we were not able to develop the full number of Texaco dealers who were in fact nominated to and accepted by the rubber companies. Those figures were not available. But as I pointed out, pursuant to the sales commission agreement, the rubber companies do not approve stations which conflict with existing distribution.

Along that same line, when we put in our case we in fact did use only about 8 or 9 ex-dealers. But as I mentioned before, we used something like 20 independent distributors, or distributors of independent—nonsponsored TBA, and used just about all the sales force, so we had a total of 40 some odd witnesses representing some 20 distributors.

During the cross-examination of each of these witnesses respondents made a great point of developing the fact that there were other sellers of nonsponsored TBA in the area. And yet would you believe it—when they put in their defense, they did not produce one single distributor, successful or otherwise. The only successful distributor that they put on were two who [9552] happened to be distributors of sponsored TBA. They were very successful.

On the question of—Miss Jones, you asked about commissions on the sale of TBA. It is a fact in this case, unlike the Atlantic-Goodyear case, the salesmen, Texaco salesmen, do not receive a commission on sales of TBA into the Atlantic service station market. But their performance of their duty is based on their sales, and increasing sales, not only of gasoline products but of TBA products sponsored TBA products. In other words, it is part of the criteria for determining whether or not they are doing their job or not doing their job. So indirectly—I Commissioner Jones: What is the evidence of record on that?

Mr. Dias: As to——

Commissioner Jones: Is there some standard of internal Texaco policy statement that tells their servicemen this is true?

Mr. Dias: Oh, yes, we have a record citation for that.

Commissioner Jones: Is it testimony or what?

Mr. Dias: I am trying to remember now. It may come out of a manual or it may be out by testimony. Let me see. Maybe I can find that.

No, I'm sorry, I do not have a note on that. But it will be documented in our brief.

[9553] Goodrich believes that it should not be included in this order. I think that this record is very clear that whether or not Goodrich goes out with a whip in its hand and helps Texaco salesmen or other personnel to push TBA products, that they nevertheless are well aware of what it is they are buying. And I think the best example of that is the fact that the sales commission itself is limited to outlets which handle Texaco gasoline exclusively, or a hundred per cent. Goodrich and the Firestone agreements are somewhat similar—there is just that variance. One talks in terms of a hundred per cent the other says exclusively.

Commissioner Jones: There aren't split stations in the industry?

Mr. Dias: Very few. I think you would find some in rural areas. But as long as the standard station—during the Standard Station case, the Court there found it was down 1 per cent, 2 per cent.

Commissioner Jones: Then what is the significance to you of the fact that the contract says this relates to Texaco stations that use exclusively Texaco gas?

Mr. Dias: Because if Texaco was the super salesman that Goodrich would have us believe it is, there would be no reason why Texaco could not sell their product to a Conoco station or a Shell station. If their salesmen are that adept at selling Goodrich TBA products, why not pay the salesman [9554] the commission or Texaco the commission for this great salesmanship, no matter where they sell it. But it must be to a service station that is a hundred per cent selling Texaco gasoline exclusively.

Also excluded are stations which Goodrich owns or has a controlling interest in. And it seems back from the very original contract in 1940, where they talk in terms of percentage—if Texaco owned 51 per cent of the station, then they would pay them a commission.

In other words, there was always that superior or economic background which is an important element in the sales commission arrangement.

The same is true in their dealings with Conoco. The same situation exists. And they also have a written contract with Ohio Oil—the situation is identical, I believe, in that, as well as Conoco. And then three others in which they have oil arrangements.

Commissioner Jones: What is the evidence in the record as to the relationship with Conoco and its service stations?

Mr. Dias: Well, we have the leases. We have—they contain the same type of housekeeping provision, short-term loan of equipment.

Commissioner Jones: Credit cards?

Mr. Dias: Credit cards. We have the testimony of one ex-dealer who testified as to the extreme pressure put upon [9555] him to buy Goodrich when Conoco decided to enter into a sales commission arrangement. Yet the testimony of various competing suppliers—suppliers of competing TBA products who testified that they had extreme difficulty, similar, almost identical to the Texaco situation, in getting into the Conoco stations.

Commissioner Jones: Do you have that kind of testimony for Texaco, too, competing TBA dealers?

Mr. Dias: Yes, we have these 20—20 competing suppliers of competing TBA products, as represented by some 40 of their salesmen.

Commissioner Jones: What other oil companies were in this?

Mr. Dias: There was Jenney, up in the New England State, Shell American Petroleum, and Emblem Oil Company.

Commissioner Jones: What do you have in the record on Jenney and Emblem?

Mr. Dias: Very little. We have statistics—in other words, the amount of sales—I think that is about all.

Commissioner Jones: What is the basis on which you are asking the Commission to declare those agreements illegal?

Mr. Dias: I think on the same theory that the Supreme Court has sustained the Atlantic-Goodyear arrangement.

We have here, in my opinion, sufficient evidence as to the operation of the plan as to Conoco. We have overwhelming evidence in connection with the Texaco arrangement. And I think [9556] that we have as much as to the remaining oil companies as they had in the Atlantic-Goodyear case.

Commissioner Jones: You will analyze all of those I assume in your brief as well.

Mr. Dias: Yes, ma'am, I can do that on about one page. There is very little. But again in connection with this one oil company, I believe it was Shell American, again it is interesting to note the Goodrich intent to buy control. We have some correspondence in that case which talks in terms of X station will have to deal with us because he owes so-and-so $8,000, and he will recommend our product.

Commissioner Jones: Jenney, Shell American?

Mr. Dias: That was Shell American.

Commissioner Jones: What do you read in the Supreme Court opinion that will enable us to declare the contracts with Shell American and Jenney, for example, as covered by the Atlantic case?

Mr. Dias: I would say so, yes.

Commissioner Jones: What element, what in the opinion?

Mr. Dias: Well, I think the fact that this Commission has found an illegal arrangement in connection with the Texaco situation. I think you can find the same thing on the evidence we have as to Conoco. And I believe under that situation I do not think we have to probe or try each and every such [9557] arrangement.

Commissioner Reilly: The Supreme Court seems to put the burden on the TBA company to show that they have—the other arrangements are different.

Mr. Dias: That it is different than those that have been declared illegal. I believe that is true.

Commissioner Jones: What evidence do they put in to show that—anything?

Mr. Dias: Who, in this case, you mean?

Commissioner Jones: Yes.

Mr. Dias: No, I think that was a matter of conjecture—

Commissioner Reilly: Do you think the Supreme Court is putting the burden on the TBA company to change the order of putting the burden on the TBA company in the trial of the case?

Mr. Dias: I think more than likely in the trial of the case. Unless you have further questions, I think I have covered the matter.

Commissioner Elman: Thank you very much.

Oral argument of Mr. Handler—resumed

Mr. Handler: May it please Your Honors, I found Commissioner Elman's analogy between a captive market and a captive audience very illuminating.

You three Commissioners are required by law to listen [9558] to our argument. You are a captive audience. Those in the room behind me are and were free to leave at any time. They are not a captive audience. The distinction is the key factor requirement. There is a captive market when there is a requirement on the part of the dealer to buy.

Commissioner Jones: How about an inducement?

Mr. Handler: There is no captive market when the dealer is free, as this record establishes, to buy or refrain from buying. Inducement——

Commissioner Jones: Take the credit card thing which troubles me.

Mr. Handler: The credit card thing was incorrectly stated.

Commissioner Jones: Aren't you paying the penalty by not carrying sponsored? Isn't that——

Mr. Handler: No—and the facts are quite different. A Texaco credit card can be used for nonsponsored TBA purchased on the regular basis of regular payment. A Texaco credit card cannot be used for nonsponsored TBA which is bought on the instalment basis, with payment deferred over a long period of time. There is a good economic reason for this. There is no penalty.

Now, inducement is sheltered by the First Amendment. A large company has free speech rights as well as a small company. You are allowed to induce if that inducement is untainted, is free from coercion, however defined.

[9559] Now, a court or a tribunal always has the choice of deciding the matter on the broadest or the narrowest possible ground, or to seek an intermediate position.

Now, if the Supreme Court of the United States had wanted to hold that sales commission is unlawful where there are terminable leases between an oil company and its dealers, it would not have been a difficult matter for it to have said it. It did not say so.

If the United States Supreme Court wanted to hold that sales commission is unlawful, where there exists the type of relationship that obtains between an oil company and its dealers, it could have said so. The Supreme Court is master of the English language.

It did not rest its decision on any of these broad grounds.

I read to Your Honors from page 70 of the Opinion where Justice Clark says the short of it, and he then summarizes the basis upon which he rests his decision.

Commissioner Elman: Included in the short of it was I think—I may be wrong—the notion that there was, I think, well expressed by the Seventh Circuit, in that case, that the dealer who buys from a major refiner is not a real independent businessman—he is an economic serf. And when you start talking about inducements to someone who is relationship to you is that of an economic serf, it is not quite the same as [9560] inducement as between equals.

Mr. Handler: I have to disagree with Your Honor with respect to both aspects of your observation.

First, if you will turn to page 13 the Court is not using the language of the Seventh Circuit, it is using the language of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

Secondly, Your Honors are not going to assume that a dealer is a serf. That has to be proved. And there is no proof to that effect. That is the key of this case.

There is no proof in this record that will support a finding that a dealer, a Texaco dealer, is a serf.

Commissioner Elman: Don't you have the same evidence of the relationship between dealer and refiner in this case as you had in the Atlantic case in which the Seventh Circuit—in which I think the Supreme Court must have had in mind by its citation of the Simpson case—where Mr. Justice Douglas used the same kind of language. It may be rhetorical to refer to a dealer as a serf, but isn't that the right word?

Mr. Handler: The Simpson case referred to the short-term leases as probative of power. There was one element. There was specific evidence in that case of coercion. Indeed, Simpson himself was cancelled because he would not abide by the oil company's retail pricings.

Short-term leases were deemed by the Supreme Court as one piece of evidence tending to explain what gave Atlantic its [9561] power vis-a-vis its dealers. But such leases are not probative of improper exercise of the power. It is one of many facts.

The Supreme Court did not say that this fact in and of itself was conclusive. It would have been a very simple thing to have said that. It did not hold that you cannot have sales commission where you have terminable leases. It analogised—it said the Commission analogized the situation to a tie-in.

Take the man who owns a patent. His customers do not even have a short-term lease. He has power. If he has a valuable patent—take color television. You have the power to impose full line forcing or tie-in. But there is no violation of law unless you actually impose the condition that you buy the second product in order to obtain the first.

There is great disparity of economic power—there isn't even a lease. A man could build his entire business on the purchase of a patented product and tomorrow find he cannot buy that patented product. There is no compulsion to sell the patented product. It is not the mere existence of power. It is the exercise of the power which was the core of the decision before the Supreme Court.

Now, I say with all the respect of which I am capable, however you define coercion, whether you define it as covert or overt, express or implied, whether you imply it from a course of dealing, whether you imply it from relationships, you still must find coercion. It is a legal concept. [9562] You must find that the buyers were compelled to purchase against their will. There has to be a rational inference from undisputed facts. And I respectfully submit that under no circumstances in this case can you find the coercion.

The fact that Atlantic may have misacted does not mean that every oil company improperly carries on its affairs.

Guilt under our system is personal. You have got to prove that we did something wrongful. And the fact that we are a big company, the fact that we have terminable leases, that is not enough.

Now, obviously, there is not the time available for me to take issue with my good friend Mr. Dias.

Your Honors have the very difficult task—here is the size of the record, five printed volumes. It is your responsibility to make findings of fact which are supported by the record.

I am not going to ask you to take my word for it. We shall brief and document all these points. We will establish that the credit card situation was not as stated by Mr. Dias, the double learning situation was not as stated by Mr. Dias, and many of the statements that he made with respect to our conduct, our power, our acts, are unsupported by this record, and we will cover that in our brief.

I want to end with this one very elementary remark. I said that guilt is personal. It is very illuminating [9563] to me that my good friend constantly refers to the Seventh Circuit opinion for facts. Those are facts in a different case. The proof of the pudding is in the eating. If we had this power, if we abused this power, if we compelled, if we coerced, if this relationship in and of itself had the effect indicated, if the terminable leases would be a conclusive fact, why is it that this record will establish that Goodrich, which is bound by the order that has been issued so far, sold not more than 10 per cent of the Texaco outlets? What kind of power is that? What kind of farming out of power is it? What kind of aiding and abetting is it to compel people to buy contrary to their wills?

I tell Your Honors that you will not find in this record support for the view that the Texaco dealer is anything other than what he himself testifies to be, and that [if] he is an independent dealer who buys in accordance with his own dictates, and not the dictates of any master. He is not a serf.

Commissioner Elman: Mr. Handler, if the Commission should conclude that there is a violation on this record and the findings of fact made on this record support the same conclusions of law as were reached in the Atlantic-Goodyear case, would you and Mr. Barton brief to us the question of the appropriate order to be entered?

Mr. Handler: We will be delighted to do that, Your Honor.

[9564] Commissioner Elman: And if there are to be any changes from the order that was upheld by the Supreme Court in that case that you wish to urge, would you urge them and give supporting reasons in the record?

Mr. Handler: We would be pleased to do so. I am glad you are asking us, because I would not want you to imply from the fact that we deal with the order that we in any wise lack confidence, (a) in our interpretation of the Supreme Court opinion, and (b) our analysis of the facts.

Commissioner Elman: Well, my request does not imply we have reached any conclusion on the merits.

Mr. Dias: Will we have answering time on this?

Commissioner Elman: Well, the order provides when the briefs are due.

Mr. Diaz: Will we be able to answer each other?

Commissioner Elman: You can make such request to the Commission as you need.

(Whereupon, at 4:25 o'clock p.m., the Oral Argument in the above-entitled matter was concluded.)

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

Before Federal Trade Commission

Commissioners:

PAUL RAND DIXON, Chairman
PHILIP ELMAN
EVERETTE MACINTYRE
JOHN R. REILLY
MARY GARDINER JONES

[SAME TITLE]

By Commissioner Elman:

I

On April 15, 1963, the Commission held unlawful as an unfair method of competition in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act[1] a sales commission agreement between The B. F. Goodrich Company ("Goodrich") and Texaco, Inc. ("Texaco"). Under that agreement, Goodrich pays Texaco a commission for promoting the sale of Goodrich tires, [9454] batteries, and automotive accessories ("TBA") to its retail gasoline dealers. By its order, the Commission enjoined Goodrich and Texaco from carrying out their agreement, and from performing or entering into sales commission arrangements with any other companies. On review, the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit set aside the Commission's order and directed the Commission to dismiss the complaint. Texaco, Inc. v. F.T.C., 336 F. 2d 754 (D.C. Cir. 1964). On June 7, 1965, the Supreme Court granted certiorari, vacated the judgment of the Court of Appeals, and directed that the case be remanded to the Commission "for further proceedings, without the participation of Chairman Dixon, in light of Atlantic Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n [381 U.S. 357 (1965)]." F.T.C. v. Texaco, Inc., 381 U.S. 739, 740.

[1] Section 5 provides in relevant part:

"Unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce, are declared unlawful."

In Atlantic, the Supreme Court upheld (1) the Commission's decision that a sales commission agreement between Atlantic Refining Company and Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company was an unfair method of competition, and (2) the Commission's order prohibiting Atlantic and Goodyear from carrying out their agreement and from performing or entering into any other sales commission agreements. The Commission, without the participation of Chairman Dixon and Commissioner MacIntyre, has reviewed afresh the entire record in this proceeding, in the light of the Supreme Court's decision in Atlantic. We have concluded, for the reasons set forth below, that the sales commission agreement involved here is, in its fundamental operation and effect, indistinguishable from the one held unlawful in Atlantic, and that an order like the one affirmed by the Supreme Court in Atlantic should be entered here.

I.

An assessment of the relationship between this case and Atlantic requires a brief description of the events leading to this remand. This is one of three companion cases in which the Commission challenged, as an unfair method of competition, sales commission arrangements between major rubber companies and major oil companies. In Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 58 F.T.C. 300, decided [9455] March 9, 1961, the Commission entered an order prohibiting Goodyear and Atlantic from employing sales commission plans. On the same day, in Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., 58 F.T.C. 371, an identical order was entered against Firestone and Shell Oil Company. The Commission's order in Goodyear has been affirmed by the Supreme Court, Atlantic Refining Co. v. F.T.C., 381 U.S. 357, affirming 331 F. 2d 394 (7th Cir. 1964). An appeal from the Commission's order in Firestone is pending in the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

In both Goodyear and Firestone the Commission's reasoning was identical: It upheld the hearing examiner's finding that the oil companies used overt coercive tactics to force their dealers to buy the sponsored rubber companies' TBA products. But the Commission specifically declined to rest its decisions upon a finding of coercion or to limit its orders to injunctions against coercive tactics. Instead, it examined the unique degree to which the economic existence of gasoline dealers is dependent upon the good will of their major oil company suppliers, and concluded that the oil company "has sufficient economic power with respect to its * * * distributors to cause them to purchase substantial quantities of sponsored TBA even without the use of overt coercive tactics * * *" (58 F.T.C. at 364-65, 407.) The Commission regarded "overt acts of coercion as mere symptoms of a more fundamental restraint of trade inherent in the sales commission itself" (58 F.T.C. at 342, 368). Analyzing the actual operation of the sales commission plan in the context of the economic relationship between the oil company and its dealers, the Commission concluded that the competitive effects of the sales commission plan were like those of an illegal tying arrangement—it "presents a classic example of the use of economic power in one market (here, gasoline distribution) to destroy competition in another market (TBA distribution)." (58 F.T.C. at 367; see 58 F.T.C. at 406). Since the amount of commerce affected was "not insubstantial", the agreements were held unlawful.

However, in this proceeding involving the Goodrich-Texaco sales commission plan, the Commission did not reach the same result. On the same day that it issued its orders in Goodyear and Firestone, the Commission held that although [9456] "Texaco has sufficient economic power over its wholesale and retail petroleum distributors to cause them to purchase substantial amounts of sponsored TBA even without the use of overt coercive tactics", the record did not contain "sufficient market data to enable the Commission to assess the competitive effects of the sales commission method of distributing TBA". The case was remanded to the hearing examiner for the taking of additional evidence on that issue. B. F. Goodrich Co., 58 F.T.C. 1176, 1178-79, 1183.

This disposition was, at the very least, enigmatic: In Goodyear, the Commission found that the competitive effect of the sales commission plan, like a tying arrangement, was the foreclosure of the substantial TBA marketing outlets represented by Atlantic's dealers. This finding was based upon competing wholesalers' testimony that they were unable to sell to Atlantic dealers who feared that Atlantic would look with disfavor upon their purchase of any but Atlantic-sponsored TBA products. Having made this finding, the Commission made no analysis of "market data" other than to observe that the amount of commerce affected was "not insubstantial" since Atlantic had sold about $50 million in sponsored TBA products during the period 1950–1956 (58 F.T.C. at 359–66). In Goodrich the Commission did not reject the hearing examiner's acceptance of the testimony of competing wholesalers regarding foreclosure of Texaco outlets, which was similar to, and as substantial as, that in Goodyear. The amount of commerce affected in Goodrich was considerably more substantial than that in Goodyear: in the five-year period 1952–1956 Texaco sold more than $245 million in sponsored TBA, almost five times as much as was involved in Goodyear during a six-year period. What additional "market data" was required is unclear.[3]

[9457] On remand, after taking further evidence, the hearing examiner found that the sales commission plans had been shown to be an unfair method of competition, and entered an order identical to those previously entered in Goodyear and Firestone. An appeal was again taken to the Commission. By that time, the composition of the Commission had changed and only one of the Commissioners (Commissioner Anderson) who had participated in the Commission's earlier decision remained on the Commission. On this second appeal to the Commission, much of the evidence introduced on the remand was challenged as incompetent or immaterial. The Commission concluded that the challenged evidence was unnecessary to its decision, and, with Commissioner Anderson dissenting, upheld the examiner's order.[4] In its view, the legal principles under which the sales commission plans were held unlawful in Goodyear and Firestone were equally applicable to the Goodrich record, even without the challenged evidence (B. F. Goodrich Co., Docket 6485, order issued April 15, 1963).

On appeal, the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit reversed and ordered that the complaint be dismissed.[5]

[3] In Firestone the Commission did consider market share data relating to the entire market for TBA, including data relating to other outlets for TBA other than service stations, and other methods of distributing TBA other than sales commission plans. But none of this information was present in Goodrich, and so presumably this was not the kind of "market data" deemed critical by the Commission to a finding of illegality.

[4] We agree that the evidence challenged on the second appeal to the Commission is unnecessary to our decision and have stricken the Findings and Conclusions of the hearing examiner based upon it.

[5] Texaco, Inc. v. F.T.C., 336 F. 2d 754 (D.C. Cir. 1964).

After holding that Chairman Dixon was barred from participating in the decision of the case, the Court of Appeals went on to reject the Commission's decision on the merits. It rejected the examiner's finding that Texaco employed coercive tactics and then held that "the Commission erred in concluding that Texaco has sufficient economic power over its dealers, without the use of coercive tactics, to cause them to buy substantial quantities of Goodrich TBA." (336 F. 2d at 762). Instead, it found that Texaco dealers "are quite free to accept or reject" the oil company's "recommendation" to purchase sponsored TBA products (id. at 763).

[9458] The fundamental premise underlying this conclusion was the Court of Appeals' finding that there was "no basis in this record for the Commission's conclusion that Texaco has controlling economic power over its dealers" and that Texaco's "contracts with [its] dealers do not give rise" to an inference that it did. (Id. at 762.) In the court's view, the "promotional services" performed by Texaco were indistinguishable from, and no less lawful than, conventional salesmanship to wholly independent purchasers.

This approach conflicted with that of the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, which affirmed the Commission's order in Goodyear.[8] For the Seventh Circuit the starting point for any realistic assessment of the nature and competitive effect of an oil company's "recommendations" under the sales commission plan was the economic power which the oil company possessed over its dealers and which derived from the contractual relationship between them. In its view, the "heart of this case is the economic power Atlantic possesses over its service station dealers" (331 F. 2d at 400). Such power was not at all dependent upon coercive tactics.[9] Rather, the "keystone" to [9459]

[9] The Seventh Circuit upheld the Commission's finding of coercion; the District of Columbia Circuit rejected it. The evidence of coercion in Texaco was no less substantial than that in Atlantic-Goodyear. The different results on appeal appear attributable to two factors: (1) the Seventh Circuit deferred to the hearing examiner's assessment of the witnesses' credibility, and (2) while only a few dealer witnesses testified to coercive tactics and a considerably larger number of dealers called by respondents testified to the contrary, the Seventh Circuit thought the hearing examiner correctly evaluated the entire testimony in light of the economic dependency of dealers upon the oil company. Review in the Supreme Court of the finding of coercion was not sought in Atlantic. To the extent respondents seek to distinguish that power could be found in the "lease and equipment loan contract with their short term and cancellation provisions." (Ibid.) Viewed in the context of these provisions, the "service station dealer is more of an economic serf than a businessman free to purchase the TBA of his choice." (Ibid.) Reaching an opposite conclusion from that of the District of Columbia Circuit in Texaco, the Seventh Circuit held (id. at 401):

> "Atlantic's power to cause its dealers to carry either Goodyear or Firestone TBA does not depend upon overt coercive methods. The totality of facts surrounding the relationship between the oil company and the dealers points to one conclusion: the oil company is able to exert sufficient economic power over its dealers so that for all practical purposes they are required to carry sponsored TBA.
> "Atlantic says that its influence over its dealers to purchase sponsored TBA short of force, threat, or intimidation is lawful; that it may recommend high quality TBA to its dealers; and that such action serves a legitimate business purpose in the promotion of the sale of gasoline. This would be a persuasive argument except for the dealers' economic dependency upon the oil company. In that setting, recommendation is tantamount to command. Covert practices are as efficient as overt action. Sophisticated methods of pressuring the dealers into carrying sponsored TBA are as effectual as express covenants and open threats."

[94601] Supreme Court review was sought in both Texaco and Atlantic-Goodyear. The Commission, arguing that different dispositions of the two cases based upon narrow factual distinctions would be inappropriate, framed the issue presented by both cases in identical, broad terms, asking the Court to hold that:

> "[I]t is an unfair method of competition, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, for a

this case from Atlantic on the presence or absence of coercion, we conclude that no such factual distinction exists; we do not disturb the examiner's finding of coercion which was based essentially on his assessment of the credibility of witnesses. Universal Camera Corp. v. N.L.R.B., 340 U.S. 474, 495-96. However, as we point out below, the fundamental issue here—the legality of sales commission agreements between major oil and major rubber companies—does not turn on a finding of coercion, and we do not rest our decision upon it.

> major rubber company and a major oil company to enter into an agreement under which the oil company, in return for a commission, sponsors the sale of the rubber company's products to the oil company's retail dealers."[1]

In both cases the Commission urged the same broad rationale reflected by the Commission and Seventh Circuit decisions in Goodyear: (1) Because of the gasoline dealer's singular dependence upon, and subservience to, his major oil company supplier, the oil company had the power to require its dealers to purchase substantial quantities of TBA without overt coercion; (2) the promotional services which the oil company was obligated to, and did, perform under the sales commission agreement constituted the exercise of that power for the benefit of the sponsored TBA supplier; and (3) as a result, the effect of the sales commission plan is like that of a tying agreement, foreclosing competing non-sponsored suppliers from the substantial market of the sponsoring oil company's dealer.[2]

[9461] The Supreme Court reviewed the Atlantic-Goodyear case for the purpose of resolving the "apparent conflict" with Texaco (381 U.S. at 363). The Court affirmed the Seventh Circuit's decision, and a week later vacated the judgment of the District of Columbia Circuit in Texaco and ordered that the case be remanded to the Commission for reconsideration in light of the decision in Atlantic (F.T.C. v. Texaco, Inc., 381 U.S. 739).

II

We turn then to the threshold question in this remand proceeding: What light is cast by the Supreme Court's decision in Atlantic upon the appropriate disposition of this case?

Reading its opinion against the background set forth above, we can draw only one conclusion: In upholding the Seventh Circuit and Commission decisions, the Supreme Court approved their broad rationale, rejected the approach taken by the District of Columbia Circuit in this case, and enunciated a rule which transcends the confines of the particular facts involved in Atlantic. In the Court's view, while coercive practices aggravate the restraint imposed by the sales commission plan, it is the oil company's power over its dealers, derived from the contractual relationship between them, and the utilization of that power through the performance of the promotional services required by the sales commission agreement, which renders the sales commission plan unlawful.

The starting point for the Supreme Court's analysis, like the Seventh Circuit's, is reflected in its emphasis upon the oil company's considerable economic power over its dealers. The Court said (381 U.S. at 368):

> "[Atlantic and its dealers] simply do not bargain as equals. Among the sources of leverage in Atlantic's hands are its lease and equipment loan contracts with their cancellation and short-term provisions. Only last term we described the power implications of such arrangements in Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13 (1964), and we need not [9462] repeat that discussion here. It must also be remembered that Atlantic controlled the supply of gasoline and oil to its wholesalers and dealers. This was an additional source of economic leverage. United States v. Loew's, Inc., 371 U.S. 38, 45 (1962). * * *"

In this context, "threats and coercive practices" merely "bolstered" the "lever" which resulted from this economic power (id. at 369). The Court viewed the oil company's aggressive and vigorous salesmanship in carrying out the sales commission plan, wholly apart from any coercive tactics, as an exertion of "the persuasion that is a natural incident of its economic power" (id. at 368), rather than as the "recommendations" of a salesman to an independent purchaser "free to accept or reject" them.

Accordingly, the Court accepted the Commission's and the Seventh Circuit's characterization that the sales commission contract, which obligated the oil company to use its power over its dealers to sell the sponsored rubber companies' TBA, had the same "central competitive characteristic" as a tying agreement—"the utilization of economic power in one market to curtail competition in another" (Id. at 369.) Indeed, in the Court's view, that was its primary if not sole purpose. Under the sales commission plan (as the records in both Atlantic and Tetaco show), the oil company, without making any investment in distributional facilities or TBA inventory, and without relieving the TBA supplier of the burden of sales, distribution, and service, is nevertheless paid large commissions for its promotional efforts. Accordingly, the Court found that "it is difficult to escape the conclusion that there would have been little point in paying substantial commissions to oil companies were it not for their ability to exert power over their wholesalers and dealers * * *" (id. at 376).

In sum, the Supreme Court, in upholding the Commission's order prohibiting outright the use of the sales commission plan by Atlantic and Goodyear, was also affirming the rationale [9463] of the Commission's decision, which the Court described as follows (id. at 361):

> "[T]he Commission considered the coercive practices to be symptomatic of a more fundamental restraint of trade and found the sales-commission plan illegal in itself as 'a classic example of the use of economic power in one market * * * to destroy competition in another market * * *'." [Emphasis supplied.]

At the same time the Supreme Court dispelled the ambiguities generated by the Commission's first decision in this proceeding. An assessment of the competitive effects of the sales commission plan does not require an analysis of "market data." Since the testimony only confirmed what was essentially implicit in the relationhip between the oil company and its dealers—that the oil company's sponsorship under the sales commission plan has the competitive effect of foreclosing non-sponsored TBA suppliers from access to the market represented by the oil company's dealers—further market analysis is unnecessary. It is sufficient to show that a "not insubstantial portion of commerce is affected".[1]

[9464] To be sure, the Supreme Court took note of the striking demonstration in Atlantic of both the extreme abuses attending Atlantic's use of the sales commission plan, and the dramatic effectiveness of the plan in foreclosing non-sponsored

[1] The Court said in this regard (id. at 371):

"Goodyear and Atlantic contend that the Commission should have made a far more extensive economic analysis of the competitive effect of the sales-commission plan, examining the entire market in tires, batteries and accessories. But just as the effect of this plan is similar to that of a tie-in, so it is unnecessary to embark upon a full-scale economic analysis of competitive

TBA suppliers from the Atlantic service station market. Atlantic was the first case before the Court involving a challenge to the sales commission plan; it presented for review a Commission decision whose rationale would render unlawful the sales commission plans themselves, whenever used by major oil and rubber companies. The Court, therefore, made a careful examination of the entire record to assess the "economic and business stuff out of which these arrangements emerge", so as to determine whether they are "naked restraints of trade with no purpose except stifling of competition" and whether "they may be too dangerous to sanction" (White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 263). But, like the Commission, the Court looked upon the dramatic aspects of Atlantic as "symptomatic" of a broader problem. Having examined, as reflected by the record in Atlantic, the dangers presented by sales commission plans, their essentially anti-competitive character, and the vivid demonstration of the abuses which may attend their use, the Court concluded more generally that the sales commission plan itself "amount[s] to a device that permits suppliers of tires, batteries and accessories, through the use of oil company power, to effectively sew up large markets" and, as such, could not be defended even though it might be an efficient and economic method of distribution (381 U.S. at 371). Consequently, the Court's ultimate concern was not limited to the sales commission plan involved in Atlantic, but was rather with "the destructive effect on commerce that would result from the widespread use of these [sales commission] contracts by major oil companies and [TBA] suppliers" (ibid.).

The Court's concern in Atlantic with the dangers presented by the "widespread use" of the sales commission plans by major oil and TBA suppliers is especially significant. Atlantic was not, as the Court was well aware, an isolated case. In Texaco, in which a petition for certiorari was pending at the time of the Court's decision in Atlantic, the record showed that Texaco entered into sales commission plans with three of the leading rubber companies—Goodrich, Firestone and, under an agree-effect. We think it enough that the Commission found that a not insubstantial portion of commerce is affected."

Atlantic had indeed based its contention that a more extensive economic analysis was necessary, in part, upon the Commission's first decision to remand Goodrich-Texaco to take evidence of "market data" for an assessment of the competitive effects of the sales commission plan. Atlantic Refining Co. v. F.T.C., supra, Brief of Petitioner The Atlantic Refining Company, pp. 31–32, 57, n. 48.

ment instituted about the time this proceeding began, U.S. Rubber Company. Goodrich also had sales commission plans with [9465] Continental Oil Company and other oil companies as well. The Firestone and Goodyear-Atlantic cases show that both Goodyear and Firestone have sales commission plans with Shell and Atlantic; that in addition, Goodyear has sales commission plans with Sinclair Refining Company, Richfield Oil Company, and a number of other oil companies; and that Firestone, in addition to its sales commission plan with Texaco, has sales commission arrangements with Union Oil Company, Continental Oil Company, and others.

The service station dealer outlets affected by these sales commission plans constitute a vast market for the sale of TBA; and at the same time only the largest rubber companies are the beneficiaries of the marketing advantages derived from the sales commission plans, a fact which would appear to confirm the Commission's finding in Atlantic that smaller TBA suppliers are unable to utilize the sales commission arrangement (58 F.T.C. at 367). Given the Court's view of the fundamentally anticompetitive character of the sales commission plan when used by oil companies possessing power over their dealers, the proliferation of these plans between major oil companies and major rubber companies constitutes in itself an acute danger for competition. It was in this context that the Court, looking beyond Atlantic, and the specific facts involved there, concluded that generally the use of the sales commission plan by major oil companies and major rubber companies, whatever its economic advantages, is a practice "too dangerous to sanction".

This conclusion is buttressed as much by what the Court did, as by what it said. The Court's affirmance of the Commission's order prohibiting outright the use of sales commission plans by Atlantic and Goodyear not only between themselves but with other companies had broad competitive consequences in both the TBA and petroleum markets. If the Court's decision were to be read as limiting the Commission in its evaluation of other sales commission plans to the specific factual circumstances involved in Atlantic, one major oil and one major rubber company would be prohibited not only from further engaging in coercive tactics, but from using a sales commission plan which its major competitors might still be free to use.

[9466] For example, at the present time, it would appear that three of the largest rubber companies, Goodrich, Firestone, and

U.S. Rubber, use sales commission plans providing Texaco sponsorship to promote their TBA products to Texaco's dealers. Yet, Goodyear could not ask Texaco (even assuming that Texaco has demonstrated no propensity to use coercive tactics in performing its other sales commission plans) to perform for it the same promotional service which Texaco performs for Goodyear's three major competitors. At the same time, Texaco, one of the largest oil companies, without making any investment in distributional facilities or TBA inventory, receives substantial commissions for the sale of TBA products to its service stations. Atlantic, a major oil company but substantially smaller than Texaco, is barred from the same economic opportunity, no matter how scrupulously it might refrain from coercive tactics in the future. Yet, the same kinds of leases, equipment loan contracts, and sales agreements stressed by the Court in Atlantic also render Texaco dealers economically subservient to, and dependent upon, Texaco; and its sales commission plans require Texaco to perform the same kind of vigorous promotional campaign described in Atlantic. To bar only Atlantic and Goodyear from the use of the sales commission plan would thus not only create a harmful competitive imbalance among the leading firms of the two industries, it would be arbitrary and inequitable.

The Supreme Court was informed of the harmful and anomalous consequence of a rule confined to the particular facts of Atlantic.[10] We find nothing which would permit us to read [9467] the Court's opinion, or its remand order in this proceeding, as sanctioning such results.

[10] The Government in its petition for certiorari in Texaco told the Court:

"Even if the cases [Atlantic and Texaco] could be distinguished on their facts, the conflict, if unresolved, would create an anomalous situation in which one major oil company and a large tire company were permitted to employ essentially the same marketing practice that their competitors were prohibited from using."

F.T.C. v. Texaco, Inc., 361 U.S. 789, Petition for a Writ of Certiorari, p. 12.

Similarly, Atlantic told the Supreme Court that:

"The order in each of the two cases represents a rule of general application, not the disposition of an isolated controversy. The rule should be uniform throughout the industry. Moreover, Atlantic and Texaco are competitors; and Atlantic, the smaller company, should not be under a marketing handicap as against Texaco, which is three times larger."

Atlantic Refining Company v. F.T.C., supra, Brief of Petitioner The Atlantic Refining Company, p. 34.

III

In our view the Supreme Court's decision in Atlantic compels the conclusion that the Texaco-Goodrich plan is an unfair method of competition and that Texaco and Goodrich should be prohibited, as were Atlantic and Goodyear, from performing or entering into any other sales commission plans. The Court's concern for the dangers which derived from a widespread use of the sales commission plan is especially relevant here. As has been pointed out, Texaco is considerably larger than Atlantic. Its service station dealers constitute an even more significant TBA market. Stations operated by Texaco's lessee dealers[11] and contract dealers[12] [9468] constituted 16.5% of the service stations in the United Stations in the year 1955. In that year, Texaco had approximately six times as many contract and lessee dealers in Atlantic.[13]

Moreover, as we have noted, in Atlantic the total sales to Atlantic dealers of Goodyear and Firestone products for the six-year period June 1950–June 1956 amounted to about $50 million. Goodrich and Firestone sold almost $60 million in TBA products to Texaco dealers in the year 1956 alone. In the five-year period 1952–1956, the sales of the sponsored Goodrich and Firestone TBA to Texaco amounted to approximately $245 million.

The economic dependence of Texaco dealers is no different from that of Atlantic dealers. Thus, Texaco lessee dealers, who constitute the most important segment of service station TBA outlets, have the same kind of short term leases, renewable on a year-to-year basis and terminable at year's end upon ten days' notice of either party. These leases contain the same kind of general "housekeeping" requirements concerning the station's use, maintenance and appearance which, if breached, can result in immediate cancellation by Texaco without notice to the lessee. The lessees have often made a considerable investment

[11] A lessee station (referred to as a C station) is one that is either owned or leased by Texaco and in turn leased by it to the dealer.

[12] A contract station (referred to as D stations) is either owned by the operator or leased by him for someone other than Texaco. In addition to selling gasoline directly through C and D stations, Texaco sells indirectly through consignees (B accounts) and independent distributors (E accounts), who operate bulk storage plants, purchase Texaco products and sell them to service station dealers and consumers.

[13] In 1955, Texaco had approximately 30,000 contract and lessee dealer stations; Atlantic had approximately 5,000 service stations. 331 U.S. at 363.

in their stations, at times, on funds borrowed from Texaco. "Contract dealers", who own their stations or lease them from third parties, nevertheless lease their pumps and other equipment from Texaco. Both lessee and contract dealers purchase their gasoline pursuant to an "Agreement of Sale", prescribing annual minimum and maximum purchases at current Texaco prices. These "Agreements of Sale" also are generally on a year-to-year basis, terminable at year's end upon thirty days' notice, and automatically cancelled if a lessee dealer's lease is terminated.

In these circumstances, the competitive advantage given a TBA supplier whose products are sponsored by Texaco need [9469] hardly depend upon the use of overtly coercive tactics. Here, as in Atlantic, Texaco's "promotional" efforts in carrying out its sales commission agreement with Goodrich and Firestone constitute a forceful exercise of its economic power over its dealers. Its consequence is to impress upon Texaco dealers, through constant repetition and in a variety of ways, that Texaco, whose favor the dealer must court, has a strong interest in their purchase of the sponsored TBA products.

Even before the dealer has been accepted, Texaco begins its campaign on behalf of the sponsored TBA products. Texaco personnel, when interviewing prospective dealers for new or established service stations, advised them of the importance of TBA, recommending the TBA products of Goodrich and Firestone. Once the dealer is selected, and before he opens his station, Texaco frequently informs Goodrich and Firestone of the prospective opening of his station, affording Goodrich and Firestone a headstart over competitors in the initiation of their own sales campaign on behalf of their products. Thereafter, Texaco, often with the direct assistance and participation of the rubber companies, maintains a continuous campaign designed to induce the dealer to purchase the sponsored TBA products. Dealer meetings and training courses designed to educate the dealer in the use of TBA products utilize the products of the sponsored companies. Texaco participates in the sponsored companies' seasonal and special sales, promotional and advertising campaigns. Texaco publications sent to its dealers carry displays of the sponsored TBA products. And, perhaps most effective of all, the Texaco salesman continually carries the message in his day-to-day contacts with the dealers. In this regard, it is important to remember that these Texaco salesmen who are most directly involved in pushing the sponsored TBA products, also play a critical role in the annual dealer evaluations and in the determination of whether the dealer's lease and contractual relations with Texaco are to be renewed. At the same time, Texaco, in making promotions, evaluates these salesmen's performances in part by their success in selling sponsored TBA products.

Frequently, both the Texaco and rubber company salesmen call upon the dealer together ("double teaming"). The Supreme Court in Atlantic noted the inherently coercive effect of that [9470] device, pointing out that since "the annual dealer evaluation by Atlantic salesmen carried substantial weight when the district managers decided upon annual lease extensions . . . dealers were . . . understandably susceptible to the encouragement of Goodyear salesmen when Atlantic men were nearby looking over their shoulders" (381 U.S. at 375). And, as in Atlantic, each dealer's performance as a purchaser of sponsored TBA is also fully disclosed by the reports furnished by the sponsored rubber companies to Texaco of the amount of sponsored TBA purchased by each dealer. As the record indicates, Texaco, in assessing the economic success of service stations, was vitally concerned with the amount of sponsored TBA sold by its dealers.

Here, as in Atlantic, there was substantial testimony by non-sponsored TBA suppliers confirming the conclusion that, as a result of Texaco's vigorous sales campaign to its dealers, many Texaco dealers were left with the impression that Texaco would look with disfavor upon their purchase of non-sponsored TBA products and that they were required to purchase the sponsored TBA. As a result, these non-sponsored suppliers were unable to gain access to these Texaco service station outlets. In sum, the Supreme Court's characterization of the operation of the sales commission plan in Atlantic is equally applicable here. Texaco, with Goodrich's "encouragement and assistance, has marshalled its full economic power in a continuing campaign to force its dealers and wholesalers to buy [Goodrich] products" (id. at 371).

Respondents argue that there are a number of factual distinctions between this case and Atlantic. But as we read Atlantic none of these distinctions is material. As already demonstrated, under Atlantic it is the oil company's power over its dealers, and the exercise of that power through the performance of the promotional services required by the sales commission agreement, and not coercive tactics, which condemns the sales commission plan. And while, unlike Atlantic, the sales commission plans involved here did not allocate territories between the sponsored TBA suppliers, the gravest danger to competition presented by the sales commission plans here as in Atlantic is in their capacity for hindering competition between sponsored and non-sponsored TBA suppliers. A device which may enhance the position of two or three leading TBA suppliers vis-a-vis smaller competitors cannot be defended on the ground that it still leaves these few firms free to "compete" with one another for access to the Texaco service station market.

[9471] Respondents also argue that, unlike Atlantic, there is here no showing that Texaco's promotional campaign was effective. Thus, they contend that the statistics show that only about 30% of Texaco's dealers purchased sponsored TBA products. This figure, however, is derived by considering the number of Texaco dealers purchasing sponsored TBA in proportion to the total number of lessee and contract dealers. In fact, however, as respondent Goodrich, itself, points out,[*] many contract dealers do not handle, and are not appropriate outlets for, TBA products. Since more than half of the total number of Texaco dealers are made up of contract dealers, the actual success of Texaco's sales commission plans would appear to be considerable indeed. But, under Atlantic, proof of the actual effectiveness of the sales commission plan is unnecessary. The Court's ultimate concern was with the cumulative danger presented by the "widespread use" of the plans, rather than the relative effectiveness of particular plans. Moreover, the Court viewed the sales commission plan when used by a major oil company as having the same competitive characteristics as a tying agreement. As in the case of a tying agreement, the fact that the sales commission plan has not fully achieved its purpose, or that non-sponsored suppliers can overcome the unfair competitive advantage which the sales commission gives the sponsored supplier, is no defense. Cf. International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 397; Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 12; Osborn v. Sinclair Refining Co., 286 F. 2d 832, 838 (4th Cir. 1960), cert. denied 366 U.S. 963.

In essence, respondents urge upon us the rationale of the District of Columbia Circuit's opinion—that despite the economic dependence of the Texaco dealer upon Texaco, Texaco's vigorous promotional activities under the sales commission plan are nothing more than the "recommendations" of a salesman to a purchaser "free to accept or reject" them. In affirming the Seventh Circuit's decision in Atlantic, the Supreme Court rejected that position.

IV.

We think that orders against both Texaco and Goodrich, identical with the orders against Atlantic and Goodyear which were affirmed by the Supreme Court, are appropriate here. [9472] Texaco should clearly be enjoined from entering into or performing any sales commission plan. As to Goodrich, like Goodyear, it was "no silent or inactive partner in the implementation of the sales-commission plan" (381 U.S. at 373). As the record demonstrates, the sales commission plan here is essentially a joint effort in which the massive power of a major rubber company and a major oil company is united, to the disadvantage of non-sponsored competitors, behind the sale of the rubber company's TBA products. Goodrich now has sales commission plans with five other oil companies: Continental, Shell-American, Jennay, Ohio Oil and Emblem. Its sales commission plans with these companies are substantially the same as those it has with Texaco. There is nothing in this record to indicate that these oil companies do not also have the kind of economic power possessed by Texaco over its dealers. We would not be justified in concluding that any of these other plans, unlike Goodrich's plan with Texaco, was not an attempt to buy the economic power of the oil company over its dealers in order to obtain an unfair competitive advantage over competing rubber companies. The order therefore prohibits Goodrich from entering into or carrying out any sales-commission plan. If Goodrich should come forward with facts establishing that it has a sales commission plan with any oil company which does not possess economic power over its dealers, the proceeding can always be reopened for such modification of the order as may be warranted. See Atlantic Refining Co. v. F.T.C., supra, at 377.

[SAME TITLE]

By its order dated June 16, 1965, the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit remanded this case to the Commission for further proceedings in conformity with the opinion of the Supreme Court herein dated June 7, 1965. Pursuant thereto, the Commission heard oral argument and received written briefs, and fully considered, on the basis of the entire record, all questions of fact and law presented by the appeals from the hearing examiner's revised initial decision of September 24, 1962. For the reasons stated in the accompanying opinion of the Commission,

It is ordered that:

A.

The revised initial decision of the hearing examiner be, and it hereby is, modified as follows:

[9451] (1) Findings 10(b), 32, 33, 34, and conclusion 7 are stricken.

(2) The first sentence of finding 8 is deleted, and the following is substituted therefor: "Tires, batteries, and accessories have become a necessary and integral part of the business operation of the ordinary Texaco dealer, and in particular for Texaco's lessee dealers."

(3) The last sentence of finding 20 is deleted and the following is substituted therefor: "It would be unusual to expect that a Texaco salesman would vigorously insist to a dealer that he had a right to buy wherever he might wish when Texaco's evaluation of the salesman's performance was in part based upon his success in selling sponsored TBA products to the dealer."

(4) The second sentence in finding 26 is deleted, and the following is substituted therefor: "There are written contracts with Texaco, Conoco, and Ohio-Marathon, but there are no formal contracts with the other three oil companies, which are smaller local concerns. Shell-American and Jenney operate generally with only service station customers selling at the retail level, but without wholesale outlets such as consignees, jobbers, and distributors."

(5) The second sentence in finding 30 is deleted, and the following is substituted therefor: "From 1952 to the end of 1955, the number of Conoco leased stations increased from 1,138 to 1,765.[1] "

(6) The last sentence of finding 31, and the chart immediately below, are deleted, and the following substituted therefor: "Outlets of the additional oil companies having sales commission contracts with Goodrich during the years 1953–55 were as follows:

	12–31–53	12–31–54	12–31–55
Conoco	1061	1272	1508
Shell-American	53	66	60
Jenney Mfg.	138	188	201
Ohio Oil	594	666	804
Emblem	30	9	25
	1876	2201	2598 [3]"

(7) The first sentence of conclusion 5 is deleted, and the following is substituted therefor: "Practically all of the representatives of the competitors of Goodrich called as witnesses testified generally that they had difficulty in selling TBA to Texaco stations and testified specifically as to the reasons given by certain Texaco dealers for not buying or selling their TBA items."

B.

The hearing examiner's revised initial decision of September 24, 1962, as hereinabove modified and supplemented by the accompanying opinion, and the order contained in said revised initial decision be, and they hereby are, adopted as the decision and order of the Commission.

C.

The respondents shall, within sixty (60) days after service upon them of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form of their compliance with this order.

PREHEARING STIPULATION IN LIEU OF PREHEARING CONFERENCE

(April 26, 1966)

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS

FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT

No. 20058

TEXACO INC., PETITIONER

v.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, RESPONDENT

No. 20061

THE B. F. GOODRICH COMPANY, PETITIONER

v.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, RESPONDENT

On Petition to Review an Order of the Federal Trade Commission

Subject to the Court's approval, the parties hereby stipulate and agree as follows with respect to the issues and other procedures.

I.

ISSUES

Petitioners Texaco Inc. (hereinafter "Texaco") and The B. F. Goodrich Company (hereinafter "BFG") have filed separate petitions to review and set aside an order of the Federal Trade Commission (hereinafter sometimes referred to as "the Commission") individually directed to each petitioner, which, among other things, would ban their participation in all sales commission arrangements, present or future, whether between themselves or with others, in connection with the distribution of tires, batteries and automotive accessories (hereinafter "TBA") purchased by distributors and dealers of marketing oil companies.

The parties, having met and attempted to reach agreement on issues, but being unable to do so, submit the following.

Petitioners Texaco and BFG contend that the issues on review are as follows:

1. Whether the Commission's Order can stand under the facts of this case in light of the Supreme Court's decision in Atlantic Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 381 U.S. 357 (1965); and, in any event, whether that portion of the Order enjoining coercion can stand in view of the fact that Texaco did not coerce its dealers to purchase sponsored TBA (as found by this Court on the prior appeal in this proceeding); and

2. Whether Texaco and BFG are correct in maintaining that:

(a) The Order, and the opinions, findings and conclusions upon which it is based, are arbitrary, capricious, not in accordance with law, without statutory authority, unsupported by reliable, competent, probative or substantial evidence, unwarranted by the facts and founded upon erroneous inferences, incompatible with the record as a whole, contrary to the Supreme Court's decision in the Atlantic case, and were entered in violation of the requirements of due process of law and are in disregard of the provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Administrative Procedure Act and the mandates of the Supreme Court and of this Court in this matter.

(b) The Commission has wholly failed to make any findings of fact to support certain of its conclusions and has failed to inform the reviewing courts and the parties by an adequate and proper statement of its findings and conclusions as to the legal and factual basis for its order, all as required by statute and necessary to due process;

(c) Since the Commission expressly excluded from its consideration the matters officially noticed during the remand hearings in 1962 and since this left nothing before it but the prior record which it had held to be insufficient to support the complaint, the Commission exceeded its jurisdiction and authority in not dismissing the complaint;

(d) The decision of the Commission issued January 14, 1966, approving the conclusion that Section 5 had been violated, is in irreconcilable conflict with the Commission's opinion of March 9, 1961 upon the identical record. By reaching diametrically opposed results upon the identical record, without explanation and only by virtue of having unreasonably prolonged the trial of this matter to the injury of Texaco and BFG, the Commission has acted in disregard of the requirements of the Administrative Procedure Act, has abrogated its functions under the Federal Trade Commission Act, and has denied Texaco and BFG due process;

(e) The evidence in the record will not support the conclusion that any sales commission agreement between Texaco and Goodrich or between Texaco and any other company or between Goodrich and any other company or any practices of Texaco or Goodrich pursuant to such agreements constitute an unfair method of competition or an unfair or deceptive act or practice in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. In particular there is no substantial, probative, competent or reliable evidence of (a) coercion; (b) the existence of and/or the employment of economic power by Texaco to cause Texaco dealers involuntarily to purchase substantial amounts of TBA; (c) the existence of and/or employment of economic power by any other oil company having sales commission arrangements with BFG to cause their dealers involuntarily to purchase substantial amounts of TBA; and (d) adverse competitive effects or any injury to competition;

(f) The record affirmatively establishes that the sales commission plan of distributing TBA as used by Texaco and BFG is a lawful selling method and is not in restraint of trade, is not an attempt to monopolize or a conspiracy to monopolize trade in TBA, does not involve a tie-in or exclusive dealing, is not an unfair method of competition or an unfair or deceptive act or practice in commerce in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act and is not in violation of any law;

(g) Texaco and BFG have been denied procedural due process and subjected to violations of the Administrative Procedure Act and the Commission's own rules;

(h) The Commission's interpretation and application of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act in this proceeding violate the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution and render that statute an improper delegation of legislative authority, without any adequate standards, and are, further, contrary to every existing expression by Congress, the courts and the Commission itself as to the meaning and applicability of the statute;

(i) In addition to all of its other infirmities, the Commission's order cannot stand because it is unjustifiably broad in reaching acts and practices not engaged in by Texaco or BFG and not relied upon by the Commission as a basis for its decision.

Respondent, the Federal Trade Commission, does not agree with the issues as stated by petitioners. It believes the issues on review to be as follows:

1. Whether it is an unfair method of competition, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, for a rubber company to enter into an agreement with an oil company possessing controlling economic power over its dealers, under which the oil company, in return for a commission, promotes the sale to its dealers of the rubber company's products. To the extent that questions may be raised and argued by petitioners, this issue will include, inter alia, questions (a) as to whether Texaco Inc. does possess controlling economic power over its dealers, (b) whether the sales commission system gives the rubber company an unfair competitive advantage, having a tendency and capacity to restrict, restrain, or lessen competition and being in nature and effect an illegal tying arrangement, and (c) whether Texaco has overtly coerced dealers to carry sponsored TBA.

2. Whether the Commission abused its discretion in its choice of remedy. This issue will include the question of whether, having found that the sales commission agreement between petitioners Texaco Inc. and The B. F. Goodrich Company violated Section 5, the Commission abused its discretion by not merely prohibiting the petitioners from continuing or having such an agreement with each other, but by also prohibiting each petitioner from entering into or performing any similar agreement with any other company.

3. Whether the Commission's proceedings, findings and decision comply with the mandates of the Supreme Court and of this Court, the provisions of the Constitution, the Administrative Procedure Act, and the Federal Trade Commission Act. This issue includes the question whether petitioners have been denied due process of law. Depending upon the particular questions pursued by petitioners under this issue, an additional issue may be included as to whether such questions have been properly raised before the Commission so as to have preserved petitioners' right to raise them before this Court, as well as the extent to which such questions may be precluded by the nature of the Supreme Court's order of remand in this case.

Procedures and Schedules With Respect to Printing of Joint Appendix and Briefs, and Use of Unprinted Portions of the Record

The record here embodies more than 4400 pages of transcript testimony, nearly 4000 pages of exhibits and numerous orders, rulings, opinions and other legal papers. All parties place heavy reliance upon detailed consideration of the evidence, necessitating the designation of substantial portions of the record in the joint appendix required by Rule 10(a) of this Court.

Fortunately, a substantial portion of the record has been printed in a single joint appendix filed in this Court in or about February 1964, on the prior appeals before this Court in this proceeding (Nos. 17915 and 17923). Accordingly, all parties stipulate and agree that the 1964 joint appendix, together with a supplemental joint appendix to be comprised of those relevant legal papers added to the record after the filing of said 1964 joint appendix, shall constitute the printed joint appendix on this appeal.

The parties are undertaking to designate promptly for inclusion in the supplemental joint appendix those papers and other materials deemed by one or more of the parties to be pertinent, material and helpful to this Court in disposing of the petitions. It is anticipated that the supplemental joint appendix will be printed in time for filing with petitioners' appeal brief pursuant to the schedule hereinafter set forth for the consideration and approval of this Court.

The parties further stipulate and agree that the respondent may file a single answering brief.

Inasmuch as the briefing requirements of the parties will extend into the summer months, all parties, in accordance with Rule 18(f) of this Court, stipulate and agree, and hereby respectfully request the Court's approval, for the following briefing schedule which, it is believed, will not delay the assignment of the appeals for oral argument:

1. The petitioners shall file their appeal briefs not later than June 30, 1966.

2. The respondent shall file its answering brief, which may be in typewritten or mimeographed form, not later than August 18, 1966, with printed brief to be filed no later than August 29, 1966.

3. The petitioners shall file their reply briefs, if they so elect, not later than September 12, 1966.

It is further agreed that any party, in a brief or at the hearing in the case, may refer to and rely upon any portion of the original transcript herein which has not been printed to the extent that such portion may be material to the issues, it being understood that any portion of the record thus referred to will be printed in a supplemental joint appendix if the Court directs the same to be printed.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, RESPONDENT

Petitions to Review an Order of the Federal Trade Commission

Decided September 25, 1967

Before BAZELON, Chief Judge, WILBUR K. MILLER, Senior Circuit Judge, and BURGER, Circuit Judge.

BURGER, Circuit Judge: Eleven years after the issuance of a complaint and sixteen years after an investigation was initiated,[1] this case returns to us from the Federal Trade Commission for the second time; in the interim, following our prior review, the Supreme Court remanded for further consideration. See Texaco, Inc. v. F.T.C., 118 U.S. App. D.C. 366, 336 F. 2d 754 (1964), remanded, 381 U.S. 739 (1965).

In 1956 the Federal Trade Commission brought proceedings against major oil and rubber companies, simultaneously instituted by substantially identical complaints, alleging as an unlawful method of competition prohibited by Section 5 of the Federal Trade Act, 38 Stat. 719 (1914), 15 U.S.C. § 45 (1946), the sales commission method of distributing tires, batteries, and accessories, called the "TBA" plan. Under that plan the tire

[1] The investigation was originally instituted in 1936 but was inactive for many years. Serious investigation was renewed between 1949 and 1951 and from 1951 on all six companies were the subject of a single joint investigation which was completed in 1954. See Hearings Before Subcommittee No. 1 of the House Select Committee on Small Business on the Organization and Procedures of the Federal Regulatory Commissions and their Effect on Small Business, 84th Cong., 1st Sess., 447–48 (1956).

and rubber companies pay commissions to the oil companies on sales of the tire companies' TBA to the oil companies' dealers. Each complaint paired one of the large tire and rubber product manufacturers and a large oil company with which it had contracted. The pairings were Texaco and B. F. Goodrich, Shell and Firestone, and Atlantic and Goodyear.[1]

(1) Background: In 1961 the Commission rendered separate decisions in each of the three TBA cases. In both Atlantic-Goodyear[2] and Shell-Firestone,[3] the Commission found coercion, unlawful tie-ins, and adverse competitive effects resulting from the TBA sales commission agreements. In contrast, however, the Commission in Texaco-Goodrich[4] found no coercion and remanded the case to the Hearing Examiner for additional evidence on anticompetive effects.[5] One year later the Examiner filed a revised decision in which he added new findings and reached new and contrary conclusions without complying with the Commission's directive to take additional evidence.

Prior to the second decision, because of statements made about the then pending case by Commission Chairman Paul Rand Dixon to the National Congress of Petroleum Retailers, Inc. in Denver, Colorado, on July 25, 1961, Texaco filed a motion before the Commission that Chairman Dixon withdraw from participating or that he be disqualified. The motion was denied and Chairman Dixon participated in the decision. On April 15, 1963, the Commission affirmed the new conclusions of the Examiner that the agreements were unlawful, but altered

[1] The pairings were based on the most substantial agreements challenged, although the complaints also challenged the contracts of each respondent with other oil and tire companies not parties to the particular actions.

[3] 58 F.T.C. 811 (1961).

[5] The Commission's first remand order declared:

> The determination of whether Texaco's exercise of such economic power in favor of Firestone and Goodyear under the oil company's sales commission contracts with these rubber companies constitutes an unfair method of competition depends, therefore, upon the competitive effects of these sales commission contracts; not upon whether Texaco has exercised its power to implement such contracts through the exercise of overt coercive tactics or by more subtle but equally effective means. 58 F.T.C. at 1178 (emphasis in the original).

Only one member of the Commission who had participated in the 1961 remand for additional evidence was on the Commission when the case came back in 1963; he dissented on the ground that the Examiner had failed to comply with the Commission's remand order. The order had explicitly directed the Examiner to take additional evidence on the sales agreement which the Commission considered indispensable to its disposition of the case.

explanation for doing so without the new evidence earlier thought necessary.

On appeal from the second Commission decision this Court in 1964 unanimously held that

> Chairman Dixon's participation in the hearing amounted * * * to a denial of due process which invalidated the order under review * * *. His Denver speech, made before the matter was submitted to the Commission * * * plainly reveals that he had already concluded that Texaco and Goodrich were violating the Act * * *.

Supra at 372, 336 F. 2d at 760. In the Supreme Court the Solicitor General did not challenge this Court's conclusion of disqualifying bias on the part of the Commission Chairman. With respect to the merits, a majority of this Court held that there had been a fundamental failure of proof. Our opinion stated:

> We see nothing illegal or even unethical in the payment of commissions for such services, except in instances where an oil marketing company forces its dealers through coercive tactics or controlling economic power to buy the sponsored products. Neither of these inferences was proved in this case, and it may not be presumed that either will exist in future similar situations.

Id. at 373, 336 F. 2d at 762 [emphasis added]. We dismissed the complaint because of this lack of proof and because the undue protraction of the administrative process constituted a denial of due process.

Meanwhile, the Seventh Circuit affirmed the Commission in the Atlantic case, Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. v. F.T.C., 331 F. 2d 394 (7th Cir. 1964), and the alleged conflict between this Circuit and the Seventh Circuit was asserted in the petition for certiorari. The writ was subsequently granted.[1]

In Atlantic Refining Co. v. F.T.C., 381 U.S. 357 (1965), the Supreme Court affirmed the Seventh Circuit holding that the Atlantic TBA sales commission agreements were an unfair method of competition. One week later in a per curiam opinion the Court granted the Commission's petition for a writ of certiorari in Texaco, and remanded with instructions to remand it immediately to the Federal Trade Commission for further proceedings, without the participation of Chairman Dixon, in light of Atlantic Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, ante, p. 367, 381 U.S. 739 (1965). Pursuant to the remand from this court, the Commission issued an order on June 18, 1965 (a) vacating its prior 1963 decision, (b) denominating the proceedings before the Commission as appeals from the Examiner's 1962 decision, (c) permitting oral argument and the filing of briefs, and (d) instructing counsel to focus on the question whether the facts of record in the present case bring it within the Supreme Court's decision in the Atlantic Refining Co. case. Order of the Federal Trade Commission Vacating Prior Decision and Order and Setting Hearing on Remand, In the Matter of The B. F. Goodrich Co. and The Texas Co., Docket No. 6185, June 18, 1965.

[1] The Shell-Firestone proceedings before the Fifth Circuit had been held in abeyance pending the Supreme Court resolution of the alleged conflict in circuits.

In January, 1966, the Commission entered an order and filed an opinion, which is the subject of this appeal. The Commission held:

> In our view the Supreme Court's decision in Atlantic compels the conclusion that the Texaco-Goodrich plan is an unfair method of competition and that Texaco and Goodrich, as were Atlantic and Goodyear, should be prohibited from performing or entering into any other sales commission plans.

____ F.T.C. ____, ____ (1966). The Commission thus held that the sales commission agreement involved here was indistinguishable in fundamental operation and effect from the one held unlawful in Atlantic.

(2) Contentions. The Commission contends that (1) the TBA sales commission system is inherently unlawful without regard to any acts of overt coercion and argues that this is implicit in the remand in light of Atlantic; (2) by its use of the sales commission system, Texaco has in fact exercised its economic power over its dealers in favor of Goodrich sponsored products; and (3) the sales commission system has given Goodrich an unfair competitive advantage.

Chairman Dixon, having been disqualified, did not participate nor did Commissioner MacIntyre. Thus only three Commissioners actually participated in the opinion and order now under review. None of the three members participating was present at the 1961 Commission which directed the Examiner to take additional evidence on the competitive effects of the [illegible] contention [illegible]

Texaco's position is (1) that the coercion provision of the Commission's latest order entered against Texaco is not justified on the record; (2) that this order is erroneous independent of the sales commission program; and (3) that the Supreme Court's remand to the Commission required that the asserted illegality of Texaco's sales commission program be re-determined in light of Atlantic; furthermore, that illegality under the Atlantic holding can be shown only by proof that Texaco coerced dealers to purchase sponsored merchandise and that anticompetitive effects followed. Additionally, Texaco contends that the administrative process has been abused by the unduly long drawn out nature of the proceedings and that this constitutes harassment and warrants dismissal of the proceedings independent of the merits.

We must now determine whether the Commission has complied with the remand order and correctly applied to applicable principles enunciated in the Atlantic holding.

(3) The Atlantic Holding. Our analysis must begin with the decision in Atlantic. In the Shell-Firestone case, the third TBA case decided after Atlantic, the Fifth Circuit interpreted the Atlantic rationale as based on three essential components, the application of each depending on the facts of the particular case before the court:

(a) the oil company's dominant economic power over its dealers;

(b) exercise of that power over its dealers;

(c) anticompetitive effects of using that power.

Shell Oil Co. v. F.T.C., 360 F. 2d 470, 477 (5th Cir. 1966), cert. denied, 385 U.S. 1002 (1967). Both the Commission and Texaco agree with this view of the Atlantic holding and this view was essentially adopted by the Solicitor General in the Supreme Court. Our consideration of Atlantic leads us to the same view as that of the Fifth Circuit in Shell, in short we conclude with Judge Wisdom that the Court hovered near the brink but did not lay down a per se rule.[9]

[9] Several factors compel this conclusion. In the first place, although the Commission took the position that the sales commission contract was illegal per se, the Seventh Circuit implicitly rejected such a view, and the absence of the words "per se" in the Atlantic opinion could hardly have been an accident. Shell, supra at 477. Secondly, the Court has stated that when it has had no previous opportunity to assay the effects on competition of a new form of economic activity, it will not declare that activity illegal per se. White Motor Co. v. United

(c) Existence of Dominant Economic Power

In our prior opinion we found "no basis in the record for the Commission's conclusion that Texaco has controlling economic power over its dealers," supra at 374, 330 F. 2d at 762. In Atlantic the Court viewed the question of dominant economic power not only in terms of the statistical facts used to show economic dependence but also in terms of specific control devices: (1) control over oil and gas supply; (2) control over dealers through short term leases, equipment loans, etc.; (3) control over advertising; (4) leverage from financial promotion; and (5) housekeeping requirements of leases. Such devices have often been alluded to in demonstrating dominant economic power and leverage. See, e.g., Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13 (1964); United States v. Loew's, Inc., 371 U.S. 38, 45 (1962).

While the statistical material in the record here is ambiguous, the record fairly demonstrates what is a matter of common acceptance, that both Texaco and B. F. Goodrich are among the giants of their respective industries,[11] and as such control large economic leverage.

Many, but not all, of the control devices mentioned in Atlantic are present to some degree here. Texaco, of course, controls the supply of oil and gas to its dealers, and the relatively heavy cost of constructing and maintaining a modern service station enables Texaco to maintain substantial economic lever-

States, 372 U.S. 253, 261 (1963); see also Mr. Justice Goldberg's dissenting opinion in Atlantic, 381 U.S. at 369–80. But cf. United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S. 365, 385–86 (1967) (Stewart, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part).

[11] The myriad figures present in our voluminous record support a statistical analysis which assumes dominant economic power. Similar statistics have been fully discussed in the Shell case, 360 F. 2d at 479–82 & nn. 21–28.

We think it is sufficient to note the following facts: Goodrich is one of our largest rubber product manufacturers and its sales in 1954, one of the years on which the complaint is based, exceeded 500 million dollars; Texaco's in the same year exceeded one and one-half billion dollars. The 30,000 Texaco stations which might be subject to the sales commission plan constituted some 18% of all service stations in the United States. Finally, from 1962 to 1966 Goodrich sales to all Texaco accounts rose from 12.7 million dollars to 18.9 million dollars. We think these not insubstantial figures sufficiently support the requirements of a statistical analysis of dominant economic power.

We should make clear, however, our view that statistics alone would not be sufficient to support the finding that Texaco exercises dominant economic power. The statistical record supports our conclusion that the Commission has not set forth with sufficient clarity an adequate factual record to explain its other findings.

age through the use of loans, short-term leases, and equipment financing. However, we agree with Judge Wisdom that "the dominance of a major oil company over its dealers comes from the leverage inherent in the structure and economics of the petroleum distribution system * * *." 360 F. 2d at 481.

(b) Exercise of Dominant Economic Power.

In our earlier opinion we concluded that on the whole record there was no substantial evidence that Texaco had exercised controlling economic power over its dealers, as the Commission had found. Similarly, after careful review of the record, we had concluded that there was no basis for a finding of coercion and that read as a whole the record demonstrated the contrary. We should note at the outset that nothing said by the Supreme Court in Atlantic bears on that holding and nothing said by the Commission since the remand alters that conclusion.

We can glean nothing from the utterances of the Supreme Court which alters the basic rule that a finding of coercion is the threshold requirement of a determination of exercise of dominant economic power. As the Commission has noted, it did not ask the Supreme Court to review our holding that the record did not sustain a finding of coercion. Equally true is the fact that in the Atlantic case the Seventh Circuit's sustaining of the Commission's findings of coercion were not appealed. But, in spite of this lack of challenge by Atlantic and by the Commission in both cases, the Supreme Court in Atlantic did not ignore record evidence of Atlantic's coercive conduct. Indeed, that Court was well aware that the coercion was found to have permeated the entire Atlantic program, contaminating even its neutral conduct.

The Commission argues that Atlantic's coercion merely aggravated the restraint imposed by the sales commission plan. We do not so read Atlantic. If the Supreme Court concluded that the sales commission plan was inherently illegal when entered into by a major oil company, it would have had no occasion to take cognizance of the coercive practices and no remand of this case would have been required. Yet the Atlantic opinion is replete with references to these practices and we cannot escape the conclusion that the overt coercive acts practiced by Atlantic were deemed essential to the ultimate action of the Court. It is surely of some significance that in almost every page of the Atlantic opinion there is some such reference, e.g., "overt acts," overt coercive pressures," "direct and overt threats," etc., 381 U.S. at 368, 373, 376.

The Commission now asserts that since it did not rely upon coercion as a basis for invalidating Texaco's sales commission agreements, the Supreme Court action vacating our judgment implies a total rejection of Texaco's position. The combination of Atlantic's emphasis on overt coercion, to which we have just alluded, the failure of the Commission to challenge our prior holding on this issue when seeking review, and the absence of any reference to the subject in the Supreme Court Per Curiam opinion on remand all tend strongly to negate the Commission's argument. Had the Commission urged on the Supreme Court a per se rule of illegality stemming from mere existence of economic power, its failure to challenge our holding on absence of coercion would be understandable.

We have difficult reconciling the Commission argument with the fact of a remand in this case. If the Supreme Court viewed its holding in Atlantic as treating contractual arrangements between the oil company and its dealers in and out of themselves as giving rise to controlling economic power, and that mere salesmanship without any coercion constituted unlawful exercise of such power, there would have been nothing to remand. The Supreme Court could have simply reversed and reinstated the Commission's order.

Of course we realize, as did Judge Wisdom in Shell, that the "Company's use of its economic power through the sales commission plan to cause its dealers to buy sponsored TBA even in the absence of overt coercion" can constitute an unfair method of competition and a violation of section 5, Shell at 482–83 [emphasis added]. The Commission also recognizes this and therefore argues that each of the "non-coercive practices" referred to in Atlantic are present in equal degree in this case. The Commission argues that the references to these practices in Atlantic compels a conclusion that even the non-coercive practices arising from the contractual relationship constitute the exercise of economic power over dealers. The Commission's contentions must be weighed against the Examiner's finding that Texaco dealers, unlike those of Atlantic and Shell, were free to accept or reject sponsored products. This view of the Examiner may have been influenced by the circumstance that only 5 former Texaco dealers testified to facts which would sus-tain a finding of coercive practices and more than 50 present and some former dealers testified to the contrary.

In light of all this we do not read Atlantic to conclude that the Court was condemning these practices as per se illegal. They were indicative of Atlantic's conduct, of a character not shown in this record, of marshalling "its full economic power in a continuing campaign to force its dealers and wholesalers to buy Goodyear products," 381 U.S. at 371. A few examples will suffice:

(1) Sales Practices. In Atlantic, the oil company

> was to instruct its salesmen to urge dealers to "vigorously" represent Goodyear, and to "cooperate with and assist" Goodyear in its efforts to promote and increase the sale by Atlantic dealers of Goodyear products.

381 U.S. at 365. The Commission characterizes the evidence here as substantially identical. Yet the Examiner was satisfied that Texaco policy since at least 1948 has been to permit each dealer to choose whatever brand TBA he desires.[12]

The Commission now argues that "on each visit, the [Texaco] salesman offers to write up sponsored TBA orders," but the Commission itself in the order presently under review struck the Examiner's finding that Texaco "salesmen were encouraged by [Texaco] management to write up orders for sponsored TBA without waiting for a formal request from a dealer."

(2) Dual Solicitation and Advance Notification. In Atlantic there was a regular practice of

> "double teaming" solicitation of Atlantic outlets by representatives of both companies to convert them to Goodyear products. They were to call on the dealers together, take stock orders, furnish initial price lists and project future quotas of purchases of Goodyear products.

[12] This policy in part states:

The Texas Company's selling personnel are expected to become familiar with Firestone and Goodrich Inventory Guide Systems and TBA merchandise and the merchandising of TBA products generally. But it should be clearly understood that we will render equal assistance to all dealers in setting up and maintaining his own basic TBA stock assortment and Inventory Guide system along these lines regardless of the brand of merchandise handled. * * * [The Inventory Guide] is not applied in any manner whatsoever that would impair any dealer's freedom to purchase such brands and quantities of TBA merchandise as he desires.

Our dealers, consignees and distributors are independent businessmen, and instructions that no undue influence is to be used to interfere with their free and independent judgment remain unchanged.

381 U.S. at 365. The Commission contends such practices are prevalent in this record. The Examiner found that "double teaming" and advance solicitation—notice to the tire companies that a new station was about to become operable—were isolated and sporadic practices, not a regular or even frequent practice as was the case with Atlantic's operations. They appeared in Atlantic in the context of an entire system designed to overtly coerce its dealers. This is not the state of the record before us.

(3) Dealer Policing and Credit Cards. In Atlantic the Supreme Court was confronted with evidence that Atlantic imposed quotas on dealers and effectively policed them by the use of a reporting system of purchases and sales of TBA. In the original appeal to this Court, the Commission contended that the quota and policing system were also used by Texaco. In the present appeal the Commission has retreated from this position. As to credit card policy, the Examiner carefully distinguished the Atlantic record from the instant record and significantly found that Texaco does permit dealers to charge non-sponsored TBA on its credit cards.[12]

(4) Geographical Supply Points. In Atlantic, Goodyear required that Atlantic assign its dealers to a single point of TBA supply. This geographical division of supply points is not present in our record and, indeed, the Examiner found that as to sponsored TBA sales, each dealer did not buy exclusively from, and was not limited to, any particular supply point but was free to deal with any source he chose.

These few examples demonstrate a different set of facts between the Atlantic record and this case. On the basis of the record before us we cannot conclude that Texaco exploited its service station market illegally for the benefit of itself and Goodrich. In short, we do not find that Texaco used its controlling economic power to compel its dealers to purchase sponsored TBA.

Atlantic's third requirement for finding a violation of section 5 is that the TBA sales commission contracts must result in adverse competitive effects on the relevant market. As we have previously noted, the first Commission remand of the case to the Examiner in 1961 was because of the need for additional evidence on the issue of anticompetitive effects. We have further noted that no such evidence was forthcoming. In our prior review of this case we also found that evidence of anticompetitive effects was lacking.

The Commission urges the following three guidelines to be the essence of the Atlantic holding on anticompetitive effects:

> (1) Extensive economic analysis of the competitive effect based on examination of the entire TBA market is unnecessary.
> (2) Evidence of economic justification or benefit to the parties concerned is immaterial.
> (3) It is sufficient when the Commission finds that a substantial portion of commerce is affected.

This, of course, explains the Commission position that the TBA system is an "inherently anticompetitive" device from which "competitive injury must result." This is simply a renewed intimation of a per se rule in Atlantic and needs little discussion since we have already rejected that reading. It is true, of course, that the guidelines suggested by the Commission are referred to in the Atlantic opinion, e.g., 381 U.S. at 370–371. But it is also true, as Judge Wisdom pointed out in his discussion of these guidelines, that the Court in Atlantic looked to the full record for examples of anticompetitive effects. 360 F. 2d at 483. Indeed, the Court was very clear on this point:

> The anticompetitive effects of this program are clear on the record and render unnecessary extensive economic analysis of market percentages or business justifications * * *

381 U.S. at 371.

Bearing in mind the Fifth Circuit's caveat of an overlap between a discussion of anticompetitive effects and the exercise of dominant economic power, we proceed to examine the record before us. As Atlantic noted, the question is whether the TBA system "impaired competition at three levels [manufacturing, wholesaling, and retailing] of the tires, batteries and accessories industry," id. at 370. And, of course, it goes without saying that the type of competition at these levels—interbrand and intrabrand—is highly relevant.

(a) Interbrand Competition

Under the TBA system interbrand competition manifests itself, if at all, most perceptively at the wholesale level. We recognize that wholesalers of competing TBA brands may well be substantially limited in selling their products to service stations under contract with major oil companies. The TBA system may deprive retailers of their freedom of choice as to the TBA products they may choose. Such competitive effects also reach back to the manufacturing level. For example, to the extent that wholesalers are unable to sell their products to service outlets, the manufacturers may suffer injury. To that extent producers' distribution systems may be impaired and expansion potential circumscribed.[11]

As an example of interbrand anticompetitive effects in Atlantic the Court found a classic division of territories between Goodyear and Firestone, the two manufacturers involved: "Firestone and Goodyear were excluded from selling to Atlantic's dealers in each other's territories," 381 U.S. at 370. Flowing directly from this was the further adverse effect that Atlantic dealers could only buy at the prices designated by supplier to whom the territory had been allocated, ibid. Finally, there was little doubt but that the combination of these and other practices in the Atlantic record, including the resort to overt coercion, had the drastic anticompetitive effect of almost completely foreclosing the market to Atlantic's own retailers and wholesalers who desired to sell brands other than sponsored products and to wholesalers and manufacturers of competing brands with similar desires.

We have earlier noted the fact that the record before us is devoid of evidence disclosing any form of territorial division of markets on the part of the sponsored manufacturers. And we have also referred to the long standing Texaco policy that Texaco dealers are free to purchase any brand of TBA which they desire to sell. See note 12, supra. Similarly, there is no evidence that any form of price dictation occurred.

But the most significant evidence on the question of interbrand anticompetitive effects concerns the testimony of Texaco dealers and sponsored and competing suppliers. The Commission relies upon testimony of former Texaco dealers and competing TBA suppliers to the effect that nonsponsored TBA could not be sold to Texaco dealers because of the dealer's understanding that they were required to purchase sponsored TBA. The Commission corroborates this testimony with "representative evidence" that in certain Texaco districts the percentage of dealers who carried sponsored TBA ranges from 70% to 89%. This evidence and these figures were rejected by the Examiner in his original decision and by the first Commission decision. The Examiner's modification of this position, which as we noted was made with no new evidence, was affirmed by the second Commission decision, and this Court rejected those findings on the prior appeal as unsupported in the record. Nothing has developed to change our view, and indeed on remand the Commission has stricken the Examiner's finding. The Commission now limits its characterization of the testimony of competing suppliers to a statement that "practically all of the representatives of the competitors of Goodrich called as witnesses testified" that they were foreclosed from the Texaco service station market. We simply cannot regard this as "representative;" such a conclusion is not supported by substantial evidence, except in isolated instances which were generally contradicted by overwhelming rebuttal evidence. Nor can we accept the Commission view that the rebuttal testimony is to be discounted because witnesses are under "pressure" from Texas. A finding of pressure on witnesses before a tribunal is not one to be lightly inferred and ought not be made without evidence of some kind; none is suggested by the Commission on this score.

(b) Intrabrand Competition

A second form of competition, intrabrand, is the inevitable result of the supply point system noted in Atlantic. The adverse anticompetitive effects are similar to those found in interbrand competition—pricing, territorial market foreclosure, and full-line forcing.[10] Without laboring the point, we have already noted that the record in the instant case simply cannot be said to reflect substantial evidence to support a finding that these practices exist in a measure adequate to demonstrate that the

[10] In the Atlantic case the Seventh Circuit found that

> [B]oth Goodyear and Firestone said that they would refuse to sell only tires under the dealer commission plan and insisted that they be allowed to handle batteries and accessories as well as their own products.

381 F. 2d at 398.

Texaco TBA contract causes adverse anticompetitive effects. We therefore hold that there is an absence of substantial evidence which supports a finding of anticompetitive effects.

The Commission maintains that the first Commission opinion remanding for evidence of anticompetitive effects was "enigmatic," and that it is enough that a substantial portion of commerce is affected under the rationale of Atlantic. Surely there is nothing obscure or ambiguous in a remand predicated on an absence of crucial evidence especially where the remand directs a further inquiry for relevant evidence. And we find no basis for treating the Atlantic case as carrying the test of quantitative substantiality to the brink of extremism by a strained literalism. Indeed, we are inclined to believe that the Commission views the situation, as the Commission opinion and brief candidly concede, as one in which it would be arbitrary and inequitable to bar Atlantic and Shell, who are very much like Texaco in broad outline, from use of the sales commission plan while permitting Texaco to continue its operation. We agree that it would be inequitable, and indeed a dereliction of the Commission's obligations, provided that all three were guilty of substantially equal violations of section 5. But simply because Texaco is in the same line of business does not mean it must suffer the pain of the misdeeds of other oil companies; this would indeed by [sic] guilt by association. We conclude that the record simply does not support a finding that Texaco violated the Act. We therefore hold that while the record shows Texaco indeed has dominant economic power, it is fatally deficient on the crucial issues of exercise of that power and subsequent anticompetitive effects.

CONCLUSION

One course available to us would be to remand this case once again to the Commission to permit it to develop additional evidence for the record [16] but the Commission and Examiner have had abundant opportunity—and direct mandate—to do this in the past and have not done so. We think the time has now come to terminate these protracted proceedings and dismiss the complaint. We recognize that the Commission's obligations and the public interest in preserving competition are not to be lightly dealt with but the Commission has now had more than an adequate opportunity to develop a record in support of its section 5 contentions over a period of fourteen years. Accordingly, the Commission order under review is set aside and remanded to the Commission with directions to dismiss the complaint.

[16] Even in a remand to the Commission for further proceedings it would have been imperative to make clear our view that the coercion aspect of the Commission order has no basis in law, or the record. Since we have twice determined there is no basis that Texaco overtly coerced any substantial number of dealers or that a pattern of coercion existed, the provisions of the order prohibiting such coercion were and are baseless.

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR RESPONDENTS

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. The Object of the Appeal: Enforcement of the Commission's Order Outlawing the Sales Commission Plan

Petitioner prays for the remand of this case to the Court of Appeals "with directions to enforce the Commission's order, except for paragraphs 5 and 6 directed against Texaco."[1] It notes that:

> "The Commission has not challenged the action of the court of appeals in setting aside paragraphs 5 > and 6 of the order against Texaco, which prohibited the latter from overtly coercing its dealers" (P. Br. 9 n. 4).[2]

[1] Petitioner's Brief (hereafter "P. Br.") 28.

Thus, this Court now has before it the precise opposite of what was presented to it in Atlantic Refining Co. v. FTC, 381 U.S. 357 (1965). There, after the Court of Appeals found that Atlantic had coerced its dealers, this Court observed:

> "* * * Atlantic has conceded the point [coercion] by not perfecting an appeal thereon" (381 U.S. at 367).

Here, per contra, after the Court of Appeals found that Texaco had not coerced its dealers, the Commission acquiesced in this ruling by not perfecting "an appeal thereon," thus eliminating coercion from this case.

In Atlantic, this Court upheld an order prohibiting Atlantic from having a sales commission plan with respect to tires, batteries and automotive accessories ("TBA") on the ground that > "The long existence of the plan itself, coupled with the coercive acts practiced by Atlantic pursuant to it, warranted a decision to require more [than enjoining Atlantic's "use of overt coercive tactics"]. The Commission could have decided that to uproot

[2] The Court of Appeals held, in this regard, that
". . . the coercion aspect of the Commission order has no basis in law, or the record. Since we have twice determined there is no basis that Texaco overtly coerced any substantial number of dealers or that a pattern of coercion existed, the provisions of the order prohibiting such coercion were and are baseless." (Appendix, Volume VI 119 n. 16).

Hereafter, the appendix will be cited as "A.", followed by the Roman number of the volume and arabic number page, viz. "A.VI. 119 n. 16."

> the practice [i.e., Atlantic's forcing its dealers to purchase only sponsored TBA] required its complete prohibition; otherwise dealers would not enjoy complete freedom from unfair practices which the Act condemns" (381 U.S. at 372-73; emphasis added).

Petitioner would impose the same drastic order here although Texaco does not coerce its dealers. On the contrary, as the Court of Appeals expressly found, Texaco dealers have always been free to purchase any brand of TBA they desired (A.VI. 117)—a finding which petitioner does not, and cannot, attack as clearly erroneous.

B. The Business Practices Involved

During the 1930's there was a gradual shift in the nature of retail petroleum outlets from "filling stations," which merely handled gasoline, lubricants and greases, to "one-stop service stations," where the motorist could go for all of his product and service needs (A.III. 2343-47). The latter required larger and costlier facilities, including storage and display space for TBA, and entailed very substantial investments by the oil companies (id. at 2349). A company not providing these facilities, however, would be at a serious competitive disadvantage. Its dealers would lose petroleum business to the "one-stop service stations" preferred by motorists and it would lose its better dealers to oil companies which afforded them this opportunity of earning greater revenue (id. at 2347-49).

Conversely, enabling the dealer to handle a full line of TBA, seeing that he receives adequate training in the marketing and use of this range of products so that he can properly service his customers, and assisting him with TBA suppliers to make certain that he receives reasonable and prompt attention from them, will increase his revenue, enable the company to obtain and retain better dealers and directly further the sale of gasoline. As the Examiner found, it is in the interest of Texaco that its dealers sell TBA since this builds a stronger dealer organization and increases the sale of gasoline (A.I. 207).

To accommodate these considerations (A.III. 2349), Texaco entered into sales commission agreements with Goodrich and Firestone in 1940 under which each rubber company agreed to pay Texaco a commission for its services in promoting their products to Texaco outlets. Neither contract grants any exclusive right to Texaco's promotional services or any assurance of purchases in any amount or by any number and each is terminable by either party on 120 days written notice (A.IV. JAX 8-9, 16-17, 150, 151, 166).

Goodrich and Firestone products were selected for sponsorship by Texaco because their national advertising, wide distribution and high quality make them both very saleable and desirable (A.I. 389-90; A.V. JAX 424).

While Texaco had an interest in encouraging its dealers to handle TBA generally, and Goodrich and Firestone products particularly, Texaco from the outset was guided by a more fundamental overriding interest. In its view, more important than any commissions it might earn in the short run, were the long-term benefits to be obtained by fostering and preserving the loyalty and respect of its dealers. If dealers were alienated, they might seek other business opportunities; it might become difficult to interest other qualified persons to replace them; Texaco service stations might close for lack of operators and Texaco's dealer organization might become demoralized. To Texaco's way of thinking, these risks outweigh any commission that might be earned by attempting to exercise power over its dealers to cause them to buy sponsored TBA (A.III. 2362-64; A.I. 381-82). Indeed, as Texaco sees it, any interference with the freedom of its dealers would be "economic suicide from our standpoint" (A.III. 2363; emphasis added).

Texaco, therefore, carefully structured its TBA program to avoid the possibility of antagonizing its dealers. In contrast to the Atlantic and Shell programs, the Texaco salesman was never put in a situation where he could tell a dealer to buy from a specific source. Where Atlantic and Shell gave each TBA supplier an exclusive territory and assigned each dealer to a designated supply point (381 U.S. at 364-65, 370; 360 F.2d at 484) maintained by one of the suppliers (precluding even intrabrand competition), Texaco did no such thing. Goodrich and Firestone have always had to compete for the business of the Texaco dealers and the distributors of each rubber company compete among themselves for it (there being no designated supply points)—all against the numerous other TBA brands which are offered to and purchased by Texaco dealers in huge quantities. Moreover, since Texaco's salesmen may not favor any one source of supply in any area (A.IV. JAX 79), they are required to maintain a neutral, hands-off attitude in negotiations between a TBA supplier and a dealer. Texaco's salesmen are instructed:

> "If, in exercising his own free choice of the brand of TBA merchandise he desires to handle, the dealer expresses a preference either for the Goodrich or Firestone line, following a clear cut and straightforward presentation of the Texaco TBA program > as outlined, the Texaco representative should assist the dealer further by arranging to introduce him to a sales representative of the supplier chosen by the dealer. It should be recognized at all times that the negotiations between the dealer and the TBA representative, and any purchase arrangement resulting therefrom, are matters for their mutual consideration, and the Texaco representative should not interfere with or attempt to influence such negotiations or purchase arrangements in any way'' (A.IV. JAX 90; emphasis added).

Furthermore, Atlantic's dealer leases required the lessee to have Atlantic's prior written consent before placing any signs on or removing them from the leased premises. Atlantic used this power to control ''all advertising on the premises of its dealers'' and ''permitted no signs or displays other than those of sponsored products'' (381 U.S. at 368, 365 n. 7). Texaco's leases contain no such provision and its dealers freely advertise and display non-sponsored TBA (A.V. JAX 547-88).

In addition to these and other basic structural distinctions, including the fact that not a single policing device was ever employed by Texaco whereas Atlantic maintained an intricate program of dealer policing and surveillance to stamp out resistance to Goodyear TBA,[8] Texaco continuously emphasized to its salesmen that there must be no interference with the freedom of choice and independence of the Texaco dealer.[4] Texaco's practice, which it has repeatedly communicated, is > "that the Company has neither the right nor the desire to dictate to the dealer the brand or type of merchandise he should handle, or the source from which he should purchase such merchandise, or to require him to handle any TBA merchandise. . . . The importance of respecting the independence of the Texaco dealer and his right to exercise his free and independent judgment with respect to the brand of TBA merchandise he will handle, and the quantities he will purchase, cannot be overemphasized" (A.V. JAX 423, 426).

[8] For example, it had dealer TBA quotas for sponsored products (381 U.S. at 365); it enlisted the help of Goodyear in identifying recalcitrant dealers (id. at 366, 374); it employed phantom inspectors (58 FTC at 339; 331 F.2d at 396) and it received reports on its dealers to detect non-sponsored TBA purchases (381 U.S. at 374). This Court noted that the success of Atlantic's TBA efforts stemmed from "the effective policing of the plan" (id. at 366).

Out of an abundance of care, Texaco's sales personnel have long been specifically enjoined by the Company from attempting to exercise any economic power over dealers:

> "It is not in accord with the dealer's contract with The Texas Company to infer or indicate to a Texaco dealer directly or indirectly that any purchase by him of any type of merchandise from any supplier whatsoever will result in a reduction of the supply of petroleum products available to him or in a cancellation of any sales contract or lease agreement that may be in effect or in any other event which will make him feel that more persuasion is being exercised by us than would normally and properly be used by us toward a customer" (A.V. JAX 430).

> "Any one who violates these policies may be subject to immediate dismissal from the Company's service" (A.V. JAX 431; emphasis added).

Indeed, far from looking disapprovingly at a dealer who did not accept its recommendation to purchase sponsored TBA, Texaco emphatically instructed its sales personnel to render "equal assistance" to the purchaser of non-sponsored products:

> "The aim of this program is to counsel with and assist the dealer in the selection of T.B.A. merchandise that will be most suitable to his specific needs and in his establishment of an effective control over the stock through the use of the Suggested Basic Stock Assortments and the Inventory Guide Forms like those furnished by both Firestone and B. F. Goodrich. It is not to be applied in any manner whatsoever that would impair any dealer's freedom to purchase such brands and quantities of T.B.A. merchandise as he desires. Our dealers, consignees and distributors are independent businessmen, and instructions that no undue influence is to be used to interfere with their free and independent judgment remain unchanged.
> "The Texas Company's selling personnel are expected to become familiar with Firestone and Goodrich Inventory Guide Systems and T.B.A. merchandise and the merchandising of T.B.A. products generally. But, it should be clearly understood that we will render equal assistance to all dealers in setting up and maintaining his own basic TBA stock assortment and Inventory Guide system along these lines regardless of the brand of merchandise handled." (A.IV. JAX 81; emphasis added).

Letters sent Texaco dealers concerning their volume discounts on lubricating oil have advised the recipient that "You are free, as you know, to select any brand of TBA merchandise . . ." (A.V. JAX 492, 513). Texaco's policy has been made known to inquiring trade associations of service station dealers and has been publicized in trade publications (A.I. 382-83; A.II. 1097; A.III. 2365-66; A.V. JAX 642-44).

No contract or lease between Texaco and any of its dealers has at any time required the dealer to handle Goodrich or Firestone TBA or, in fact, any TBA at all. No Texaco dealer has ever had his supply of petroleum products reduced or his lease or sales agreement cancelled as a result of his rejection of sponsored TBA. In contrast to Atlantic's total conversion of its dealers to sponsored TBA within a matter of months, after more than 15 years of Texaco's sales efforts two-thirds of all Texaco retail outlets do not buy any Firestone or Goodrich tires and tubes and only about 20% regularly buy any of these companies' batteries or accessories (A.IV. JAX 177-180; see infra, pp. 45-6). Those Texaco dealers who handle any sponsored TBA do not buy it exclusively (A.I. 214) and whatever they buy they obtain from any supply point that suits their convenience (A.I. 219).

In sum, as the Court of Appeals pointed out on two separate occasions, Texaco dealers "are quite free to accept or reject" Texaco's recommendation with regard to the brands of TBA that they purchase and "are free to purchase any brand of TBA which they desire to sell" (A.VI. 13, 117; emphasis added).

C. Nature and History of Proceedings

1. The Complaint

On January 11, 1956, the Federal Trade Commission filed three virtually verbatim complaints: one commencing this case against Texaco and Goodrich; another against the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. and The Atlantic Refining Co. (Dkt. No. 6486); and the third against The Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. and Shell Oil Co. (Dkt. No. 6487). Each complaint challenged as an unfair method of competition an agreement whereby the rubber company paid the oil company a commission for the latter's services in promoting the sale of the rubber company's TBA to dealers and distributors selling the oil company's gasoline.

2. The First Commission Opinion Found No Basis in the Record for any Order against Texaco

Five years later, on March 9, 1961, the Commission rendered its separate decisions in each of the three TBA cases. In both the Atlantic-Goodyear and Shell-Firestone proceedings, it found dealer coercion, unlawful tie-ins and adverse competitive effects resulting from the TBA sales commission agreements; thus it prohibited the agreements. In sharp contrast, in the Texaco-Goodrich case the Commission did not find coercion, tie-ins or anticompetitive effects. In the Commission's view, the legality of Texaco's sales commission contract with Goodrich turned upon its "competitive effects" (A.I. 179). It concluded:

> "However, the record in this case does not contain sufficient market data to enable the Commission to assess the competitive effects of the sales commission method of distributing TBA employed by these respondents. The case will be remanded to the hearing examiner for the taking of evidence indicating the competitive effects of the sales commission contracts at the manufacturing, wholesale and retail levels of TBA distribution'' (A.I. 186; emphasis added).

3. Texaco's Efforts to Bar the Remand Hearings

Texaco and Goodrich promptly brought an action against the Commission in the District Court for the District of Columbia, Texaco Inc. v. FTC, Civil No. 2219-61. They contended that after at least nine years of investigation and trial, the Commission, having found the evidence insufficient to support its charges, was without authority or discretion to remand for the receipt of ''further evidence'' not shown to exist. An injunction was sought against further proceedings as being in excess of the Commission's authority, in derogation of the Commission's statutory duty to proceed with reasonable dispatch and in violation of constitutional requirements of due process. In opposing this suit, counsel for the Commission represented that the Commission ''needed additional evidence in order to decide the issues presented,''[5] and that the remand was not to be a retrial of what had gone before.[6] Relying on these representations, the Court denied a temporary injunction but ruled that Texaco and Goodrich would be entitled to relief unless all further evidence was heard and the Examiner filed his decision by October 2, 1962. Subsequent attempts to obtain immediate temporary injunctive relief from the Court of Appeals and from this Court were unsuccessful. Texaco Inc. v. FTC, Appeal No. 17,111 (D.C. Cir. June 22, 1962); Texaco Inc. v. FTC (U.S. Sup. Ct. July 10, 1962); Texaco Inc. v. FTC (U.S. Sup. Ct. July 10, 1962; Black, J.). In each instance the tribunals were advised by Commission counsel that the remand was essential to develop needed additional evidence.

4. The Sham Remand Hearings

The remand hearings lasted 2½ days and closed on July 19, 1962 without any additional evidence having been adduced by Commission counsel. Instead, counsel induced the Examiner to take official notice of certain matters in the Commission's opinion in the Shell-Firestone case. The Examiner brushed aside Texaco's plea that the doctrine of official notice did not permit shuffling evidence of findings from case to case, thereby cutting off the right of cross-examination and shifting the burden of proof. Subsequently, the Commission upheld Texaco on this point by eliminating from consideration anything adduced at the remand (A.I. 302-03; A.VI. 80 n. 3, 94).

5. The Revised Initial Decision in Violation of the Commission's Mandate

The Examiner had been authorized only to receive "further evidence concerning the competitive effects of the respondents' practices" and to indicate what changes, if any, he wished to make in his first Initial Decision in light of such evidence (A.I. 174). Nevertheless, on September 24, 1962, without any additional evidence from Commission counsel, he held that the use of the sales commission method of distributing TBA violated Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and he issued an order which duplicated that entered by the Commission in the other two TBA cases.

6. The Second Commission Opinion

On April 15, 1963, eleven days after hearing oral argument of the "second round" appeal, the Commission handed down a 3-1 per curiam decision holding precisely the opposite of what it had held on March 9, 1961. Looking only to the pre-remand record, and without reviewing any evidence in its three paragraph opinion, the Commission ruled that the old record "amply supports the conclusions and the order of the hearing examiner" (A.I. 302). No basis for its reversal of position was set forth. As legal authority, the Commission merely cited its two other TBA decisions which it had handed down on the very day when it had earlier found the record in this case insufficient.[7]

Before this second appeal to the Commission, the participation of Chairman Dixon, one of the members of the Commission majority, had been unsuccessfully challenged by Texaco. Prior to the remand hearings before the Examiner, Chairman Dixon, in a speech made on July 25, 1961, had publicly denounced the practices attacked by the complaint as illegal and had specifically named Texaco and Goodrich in this connection.

[7] Commissioner MacIntyre did not participate. Commissioner Anderson, who was the only member of the Commission who had participated in its earlier decision, did not concur "for the reason that the command of the remand order of March 9, 1961 had not been met and complied with" (A.I. 303).

7. The First Decision of the Court of Appeals

On the appeal from the Commission's 1963 Decision, the Court of Appeals was unanimous that "Chairman Dixon's participation in the hearing amounted in the circumstances to a denial of due process which invalidated the order under review," and that the motion for his disqualification should have been granted (A.VI. 8).

With respect to the merits, a majority further held that there had been a failure of proof. First, it ruled that coercion had not been proved (A.VI. 13), specifically finding that the record "demonstrates the contrary" of "coercive tactics" (A.VI. 12). Not only is it Texaco's policy "to respect the independence of its dealers," but such policy was followed in actual practice (A.VI. 11).

Second, noting that under the Commission's view of the law an essential element of a Section 5 violation was Texaco's possession and exercise of controlling economic power over its dealers, the Court ruled that there was no substantial evidentiary basis for any such finding (ibid.).

Third, it inferentially ruled that no anticompetitive effects had been shown when it found that Texaco dealers "are quite free to accept or reject" Texaco's "recommendation" concerning TBA (A.VI. 13).

Finally, the Court held that the Commission's

> "efforts in this case—fruitless after a dozen years—have exceeded permissible limits and have had unreasonably harassing and oppressive effects upon the companies under attack" (ibid.).

The Court concluded:

> "Because the Commission's drastic orders are not supported by the record as a whole and because of the undue protraction of the administrative process, we are of the opinion that this long drawn out proceeding should now be terminated'' (ibid.).

8. Atlantic Case Taken to This Court

In reaching this conclusion, the Court of Appeals was well aware of the Seventh Circuit's ruling on different facts in Atlantic-Goodyear,[8] which had been decided a few months earlier.

The record before the Seventh Circuit had literally seethed with evidence of Atlantic's coercive practices vis-a-vis its dealers. In this context of overwhelming proof that Atlantic's dealers were being forced by Atlantic to act contrary to their wishes, the Seventh Circuit characterized them as ''economic serfs'' and affirmed the Commission's order.

In seeking review before this Court, Atlantic conceded that it had coerced its dealers and did not challenge the anti-coercion order. What Atlantic contested was the prohibition against the sales commission plan itself, arguing that such additional relief was unnecessary.

9. This Court's Atlantic Decision

Finding that Atlantic had successfully ''marshaled its full economic power in a continuing campaign to force its dealers and wholesalers to buy Goodyear products'' with a concomitant detrimental impact on competition (381 U.S. at 371; emphasis added), this Court sustained the order prohibiting Atlantic from being a party to TBA sales commission agreements. The Court held that such a prohibition was warranted because of the "long existence of the plan itself, coupled with the coercive acts practiced by Atlantic pursuant to it" (381 U.S. at 372; emphasis added).

10. This Court's Prior Disposition of This Case

While Atlantic's petition for certiorari was pending before this Court, the government petitioned for certiorari in this case but did not seek review of the decision disqualifying Chairman Dixon. Following its decision in Atlantic, the Court granted the writ, and without passing upon the merits, directed that the judgment of the Court of Appeals be vacated and that the case be remanded to the Commission for further proceedings "in light of Atlantic Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 381 U.S. 357 (1965)." 381 U.S. 739, 740 (1965).

11. Proceedings Before the Commission After Remand

On remand from this Court, the Commission (Commissioners Dixon and MacIntyre not participating) rendered an opinion dated January 14, 1966 and issued an order identical to the one it had issued in Atlantic.

Although the purpose of the remand was to determine "whether the facts of record in the present case" bring it within the Atlantic rule, the Commission's opinion eschewed factual analysis. Instead, it proceeded on the newly adopted legal premise that it is inherently unlawful for a "major" oil company to enter into a TBA sales commission arrangement with a "major" rubber company. Under this rule of per se illegality, the factual distinctions between Atlantic and the present case were deemed beside the point. To the Commission, it made no difference that Atlantic's dealers were forced against their will to purchase sponsored TBA and Texaco's dealers were not. Texaco, it held, should be accorded the same treatment as Atlantic even if "Texaco has demonstrated no propensity to use coercive tactics in performing its" TBA sales commission plans (A. VI. 88).

The precise order imposed upon Atlantic as being remedially necessary to remove the effects of that company's longstanding coercive practices, was also imposed upon Texaco (A. VI. 95; A.I. 230 et seq.). Apart from paragraphs 5 and 6, which have now been eliminated from the case, the order prohibits Texaco from receiving "anything of value" from any TBA supplier in connection with the sale of TBA to Texaco dealers by anyone other than Texaco itself (Par. 1); from acting as a sales agent in connection with TBA (Par. 2) and from recommending to its dealers that they consider the purchase of any particular brand of TBA from anyone other than Texaco — even though Texaco receives nothing of value for such recommendation and regardless of the superiority of the product and the benefit Texaco's dealers might obtain from this information (Pars. 3 and 4).[9]

12. The Fifth Circuit's Decision in Shell

By the time this case reached the Court of Appeals again on petitions to review filed by Texaco and Goodrich, the Fifth Circuit had decided Shell-Firestone.[10] In that

[9] The Commission's full explanation for the "relief" against Texaco is set forth in two sentences of its decision:

> "We think that orders against both Texaco and Goodrich, identical with the orders against Atlantic and Goodyear which were affirmed by the Supreme Court, are appropriate here. Texaco should clearly be enjoined from entering into or performing any sales commission plan" (A.VI. 93; emphasis added).

[10] Shell Oil Co. v. FTC, 360 F.2d 470 (5th Cir. 1966).

case, Judge Wisdom rejected the Commission's contention that Atlantic had held that all sales commission arrangements between major oil and rubber companies were unlawful per se (360 F.2d at 479). According to Judge Wisdom:

> "The rationale for the Atlantic decision may be broken down into three essential components, each of which depends on the facts of the case before the court:
> (1) The oil company's dominant economic power over its dealers;
>
> (2) the exercise of that power over its dealers;
> (3) the anti-competitive effects of using that power" (id. at 477).

"[O]n the facts of the case before the Court," the Fifth Circuit held that the Shell-Firestone sales commission agreement had violated Section 5: "* * * the controlling facts in this case are so similar to those in Atlantic that the same result should be reached in both cases" (id. at 475).

13. The Decision Below: The Second Decision of the Court of Appeals

When this case returned for a second time to the Court of Appeals, that Court addressed itself to the question

> "whether the Commission has complied with the remand order and correctly applied the applicable principles enunciated in the Atlantic holding" (A.VI. 110).

Its unanimous conclusion, after a second full review of the record and with the benefit of the Fifth Circuit's Shell decision before it, was that the Commission had not.

Declaring itself in agreement with Judge Wisdom's view of Atlantic (ibid.), the court below scrutinized the record in this case in terms of the three essential components of the Atlantic rationale.

a. Existence of Dominant Economic Power

As to the first component—the "existence of dominant economic power"—the Court of Appeals revised its prior finding in light of Atlantic and, quoting from Judge Wisdom in Shell, held that such power was "'inherent in the structure and economics of the petroleum distribution system'" (id. at 112).

b. Exercise of Dominant Economic Power

But on the critical question of whether Texaco had exercised dominant economic power—the second essential element under Atlantic—the Court of Appeals adhered to its earlier determination that Texaco had not exploited its power to cause its dealers to purchase sponsored TBA.

At the outset, the Court noted that Texaco, unlike Atlantic, had not engaged in coercion. For this reason the Court of Appeals made clear that, wholly apart from the legality of Texaco's sales commission plan, there was no basis in law or fact for the anti-coercion provisions of the Commission's order (id. at 119 n. 16)—a ruling on which petitioner does not seek review by this Court. (P. Br. 9 n. 4, 28).

With respect to the legality of the plan itself, the court below advanced two distinct theories to support its conclusion that there had been no exercise of dominant economic power.

First, it noted that in Atlantic "coercion was found to have permeated the entire Atlantic program, contaminating even its neutral conduct" (A.VI. 112). The Court of Appeals accordingly viewed "a finding of coercion [as] the threshold requirement of a determination of exercise of dominant economic power" (ibid.).

But the court below did not rest its decision on the absence of coercion. As an independent ground for its decision it found that Texaco had not exercised dominant economic power over its dealers even in a non-coercive way:

> "Of course we realize, as did Judge Wisdom in Shell, that the 'Company's use of its economic power through the sales commission plan to cause its dealers to buy sponsored TBA even in the absence of overt coercion' can constitute an unfair method of competition and a violation of section 5, Shell at 482-483" (id. at 113; emphasis in original).

The Court then proceeded to meet head-on petitioner's argument that each of the "non-coercive practices" referred to in Atlantic are present in equal degree in this case (ibid.).

First, the Court emphasized the finding that "Texaco dealers, unlike those of Atlantic and Shell, were free to accept or reject sponsored products" (ibid.). Amplifying this critical distinction, the Court contrasted Atlantic's sales practices with Texaco's, noting that whereas Atlantic had put pressure on its dealers to "vigorously" represent and cooperate with Goodyear, Texaco had followed a policy of permitting "each dealer to choose whatever brand TBA he desires" (id. at 114).

The Court cited other examples of fundamental differences in the two oil companies' sales commission programs: Atlantic's regular policy of "double teaming" and advance solicitation—which with Texaco were "isolated and sporadic" occurrences; Atlantic's TBA dealer quota and policing system—having no Texaco counterpart; Atlantic's restrictive credit card policy—as distinguished from Texaco's practice of permitting its dealers to charge non-sponsored TBA; and Atlantic's assignment of its dealers to a single Goodyear TBA supply point—while Texaco dealers were assigned to nobody, evidencing their freedom to deal with any supplier of their choice (id. at 114-15).

Summing up on this issue, the Court declared:

> "These few examples demonstrate a different set of facts between the Atlantic record and this case" (id. at 115).

The court accordingly concluded that Texaco had not "exploited its service station market illegally for the benefit of itself and Goodrich" (ibid.).

c. Anticompetitive Effects

With respect to the third requirement—a showing of anticompetitive effects—the Court of Appeals approached the problem from the point of view of both interbrand and intrabrand competition. Once again the records in the two cases were entirely different.

In Atlantic, interbrand competition had been snuffed out by reason of "a classic division of territories between Goodyear and Firestone," from which it followed that "Atlantic dealers could only buy at the prices designated by [the] supplier to whom the territory had been allocated" (id. at 117). The Texaco-Goodrich record, per contra, "is devoid of evidence disclosing any form of territorial division" or "price dictation" (ibid.). As for the Commission's reliance on certain testimony that non-sponsored TBA suppliers had difficulty selling to Texaco dealers because the latter felt that they were required to buy the sponsored product, the Court for the second time rejected such evidence as atypical "isolated instances which were generally contradicted by overwhelming rebuttal evidence" (id. at 118).

As for intrabrand competition, whereas Atlantic's supply point system had the inevitable effect of precluding such competition, Texaco had no such system; hence there was no parallel anticompetitive effect.

In the face of "the long standing Texaco policy that Texaco dealers are free to purchase any brand of TBA which they desire to sell" (id. at 117), the fact that Texaco dealers purchased substantial quantities of sponsored TBA did not constitute proof of the requisite adverse effect on competition.

In sum, the Court concluded that "while the record shows Texaco indeed has dominant economic power, it is fatally deficient on the crucial issues of exercise of that power and subsequent anticompetive effects" (id. at 119). For this reason the Court rejected the Commission's position that it would be unfair to prevent Atlantic and Shell, but not Texaco, from using the sales commission plan:

> "We agree that it would be inequitable, and indeed a dereliction of the Commission's obligations, provided that all three were guilty of substantially equal violations of section 5. But simply because Texaco is in the same line of business does not mean it must suffer the pain of the misdeeds of other oil companies; this would indeed be guilt by association. We conclude that the record simply does not support a finding that Texaco violated the Act" (ibid.; emphasis added).

Confronted with the failure of proof in this case, the Court of Appeals recognized that

> "One course available to us would be to remand this case once again to the Commission to permit it to develop additional evidence for the record but the Commission and Examiner have had abundant opportunity—and direct mandate—to do this in the past and have not done so. We think the time has now come to terminate these protracted proceedings and dismiss the complaint, * * * the Commission has now had more than an adequate opportunity to develop a record in support of its section 5 contentions over a period of fourteen years" (id. at 119-20; emphasis added).

Accordingly, it directed that the complaint be dismissed.

Summary of Argument

The Court of Appeals correctly concluded that the sales commission arrangement between Texaco and Goodrich is not illegal in and of itself and was not illegally performed. Nothing in the agreements between Texaco and any supplier of TBA requires it to exercise any economic power over its dealers and the evidence in this record, as the Court of Appeals twice found, establishes that Texaco has not done so. On the contrary, Texaco's dealers are completely free to disregard Texaco's recommendations and to purchase whatever brands of TBA they desire.

During oral argument of the Atlantic case, the Solicitor General advised this Court that the government was not suggesting that there may not be sales commission arrangements which would pass muster under Section 5; the method of performing the contract was said to be the critical factor determining its legality (infra, pp. 31-4). The record in this case demonstrates that it is indeed possible to operate under a sales commission plan so that no dealer will be constrained to accept the oil company's recommendation and no anticompetitive effect will be produced. Texaco, unlike Atlantic, has never coerced its dealers or done anything else to require them to purchase sponsored TBA. The Commission in this case expressly discarded coercion as a basis for its decision and petitioner is not seeking an anti-coercion order against Texaco. The fact is that, despite more than 15 years of promotional efforts by Texaco on behalf of sponsored TBA, the vast majority of Texaco dealers purchase no sponsored TBA whatever and, as the Examiner found, every Texaco dealer purchases non-sponsored TBA.

The Commission which reviewed the evidence in the three TBA companion cases in 1961 found the sales commission arrangements of Atlantic and Shell to be unfair methods of competition, but simultaneously held that the evidence in this record permitted no such finding against Texaco. The present Commission's action here was taken without the reception of an iota of additional evidence against respondents and in contravention of the Commission's own mandate and its representations to the courts regarding the need for more evidence to make out a case under Section 5.

The legal theory on which petitioner is now attempting to condemn Texaco's sales commission arrangements is not sanctioned by anything decided or said by this Court in Atlantic. Although the Commission was directed to apply the principles of Atlantic here, it has, instead, attempted to coin a brand new theory of liability.

Stripped to its essentials, the theory is this: Since Texaco's economic power is superior to that of any of its dealers, when Texaco promotes the sale of sponsored TBA

the dealer, knowing that Texaco has an interest in his purchase of the sponsored product, "no longer selects his brand of TBA solely on the basis of the comparative merits of the competing products" because he purportedly feels constrained to "acquiesce in Texaco's recommendation" in the absence of strong countervailing factors (P. Br. 23), thereby foreclosing competition. Petitioner argues that this is true even though Texaco does not coerce or pressure its dealers to buy the sponsored product and the dealer is in fact free to buy whatever brand of TBA he desires.

This theory patently is not the rationale of Atlantic (Point A, infra). What is more, there is no evidential foundation for invoking any such theory in this case; on the contrary, the evidence of record and findings of the court below completely refute the theory (Point B, infra).[11] There is no proof that Texaco dealers do not purchase TBA on the basis of what they conceive to be the relative merits of the various brands; or that they "feel constrained" to buy the sponsored product absent unspecified "strong countervailing factors." What the record does show is that when it comes to buying TBA, Texaco dealers are free, they know they are free and they repeatedly exercise their freedom to purchase non-sponsored products without jeopardizing their dealerships or in any way incurring Texaco's ill will.

[11] That being so, there is no occasion for the Court to address itself to the question of whether the theory can be raised in this Court in view of the fact that it goes beyond the teachings of the Atlantic case and therefore exceeds this Court's mandate. Nor is there any occasion to consider whether the theory, even if properly raised, is sound as a matter of law, since the evidence necessary to sustain it is lacking.

The Commission was not warranted in concluding that Texaco had violated Section 5—either under the standards of Atlantic or any other permissible application of the statute.

ARGUMENT

The Court of Appeals Correctly Decided This Case

A. Application of Atlantic to the Facts of This Case, in Accordance with This Court's Mandate, Required Dismissal of the Complaint

1. The Atlantic Decision

The gravamen of the violation in Atlantic was Atlantic's concededly coercive practices whose successful employment produced demonstrable anticompetitive effects. This was the basis upon which Atlantic was presented to this Court by the Solicitor General [13] and upon which this Court's decision rested.

The Court made this unmistakably clear in its treatment of the matter of relief. The whole point of Part V of the Atlantic opinion was to justify the breadth of the order precisely because it was not limited to the conduct held unlawful—the coercive use of the plan. Atlantic had strenuously argued that the order should enjoin only the use of coercive tactics. This argument was rejected by the Court but not because non-coercive use of the plan was itself a violation of law. It was rejected because of the settled principle of administrative law that permits an agency to forbid lawful conduct which it deems necessary for effective relief against proven illegal conduct. The Court stated that it did not > "believe that the order is too broad.[18] Section 5(b) empowers the Commission to issue a cease-and-desist order against anyone using an unfair method of competition in commerce. The Commission was of the opinion that to enjoin the use of overt coercive tactics [i.e., the unfair method of competition alone] was insufficient. We think it was justified in this conclusion. The long existence of the plan itself, coupled with the coercive acts practiced by Atlantic pursuant to it, warranted a decision to require more" (381 U.S. at 372; emphasis added).

The words "require more" in this context are especially significant. When all that is done is to forbid the conduct held unlawful, it is patent that "more" is not being required.

Moreover, if the Court believed that there was anything inherently violative of Section 5 in TBA sales commission plans when entered into by a major oil company, it would not have justified the order prohibiting such agreements on the basis of the "long existence of the plan itself, coupled with the coercive acts practiced by Atlantic" (emphasis added).

The only basis for the conclusion of illegality recognized by the Court was that Atlantic had successfully "marshaled its full economic power in a continuing campaign to force its dealers and wholesalers to buy Goodyear products" with

[18] If the order had enjoined only illegal conduct, of course, there would have been no question about its scope. Because it prohibited lawful conduct it was necessary for the Court to decide whether it was "too broad."

a concomitant detrimental impact on competition (381 U.S. at 371; emphasis added).

This is fully buttressed by other unambiguous expressions throughout the majority opinion. Thus, in referring to the order against Goodyear, the Court again emphasized that what "outlaws the commission plan" is not "the oil company's power" alone but in addition its "overt acts toward its outlets" (381 U.S. at 373; emphasis added). The crux of the decision as to Goodyear is contained in the following sentences:

> "Nor is it any objection for Goodyear to claim that it did not exert any overt coercive pressures on the oil companies' outlets. It is of little consequence that Atlantic actually applied the pressure. For so close was the teamwork of the two companies that, even with blinders on, Goodyear could not have been ignorant of those practices" (381 U.S. at 376; emphasis added).

With respect to "the manner in which this sponsorship was carried out," the Court concluded that:

> "the most impressive evidence of its effectiveness was its undeniable success within a short time of its inception. In 1951, seven months after the sales-commission plan had gone into effect, Goodyear had enjoyed great success in signing contracts with Atlantic dealers despite the fact that a 1946-1949 survey had shown that 67% of the dealers had preferred Lee tires and 76% Exide batteries" (381 U.S. at 368-69).

It was "[w]ith this background in mind"—of coercive practices and quick success against contrary dealer preference—that the Court went on to consider whether there was a "reasonable basis in law" for the finding of illegality (381 U.S. at 369).

The Court found that there was such a basis by analogy to a tying scheme. The analogy was justified on the ground that the competitive effects of the conduct of Atlantic and Goodyear were comparable to those resulting from a tying arrangement.[14]

In a tie-in case, of course, it is not mere persuasion or salesmanship to induce purchasers to buy two products which is prohibited,[15] but the requirement that in order to obtain one the purchaser must take the other as well. The core of a tie-in is the requirement imposed upon the buyer. The Court concluded that Section 5 had been violated in Atlantic because "the effect of the plan was as though [emphasis is the Court's] Atlantic had agreed with Goodyear to require its dealers to buy Goodyear products and had done so" (381 U.S. at 370; emphasis added).[16]

The Court presumably rested its decision on this narrow ground not only because the Solicitor General did not ask it to go farther but also because to have done so would have raised extremely serious constitutional questions with respect to the authority of the Federal Trade Commission to impose curbs upon mere speech absent coercion,[17] and to depart so far from traditional antitrust principles in prohibiting legitimate business operations as to be without "'reasonable basis in law'" (381 U.S. at 367) and thereby violate due process guarantees. These questions were [17] This Court has always been alert to the fact that antitrust considerations do not override First Amendment rights. Eastern R.R. Presidents Conference v. Noerr Motor Freight, Inc., 365 U.S. 127 (1961). It has been equally firm in recognizing that "the rights of free speech and a free press are not confined to any field of human interest" and that the "idea is not sound therefore" that such safeguards are "inapplicable to business or economic activity." Thomas v. Collins, 323 U.S. 516, 531 (1945). Moreover, this Court, as well as the lower Federal Courts, have repeatedly made clear that, absent coercion, the use of speech to persuade to action—even in an economic context when the party seeking such action has power over the listener—is a fully protected Constitutional right.

> "'Free trade in ideas' means free trade in the opportunity to persuade to action, not merely to describe facts.

avoided by reliance upon coercion and the analogy to tie-in selling—i.e., to the situation where someone is being forced to buy a product against his will. The Court unmistakably declined to go any further.

2. The Basis for Affirmance of the Atlantic Order Urged by the Solicitor General

The Court's holding in Atlantic is illuminated by what it was asked to do by the government on oral argument.

When closely questioned by various members of the Court, the Solicitor General specifically disclaimed seeking a ruling that TBA sales commission plans are unlawful absent coercive exercise of economic power by the oil company.

He was explicit that it was not claimed that the sales commission arrangement itself was inherently unlawful:

> "* * * if you had just the contract standing alone, you could not say on its face that this is bad, it depends on what they would do about it." (Transcript of Oral Argument Before Supreme Court, Atlantic Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, p. 72).

In this connection Justice Brennan observed:

> "* * * there is no contention of the Government that the sales commission contract in and of itself ran afoul of such a provision [Section 5], it is only the performance under the contract, the method of operation." (id. at 80).

The Solicitor General agreed with Justice Brennan that:

> "* * * the Government does not suggest that there may not be commission sales arrangements which would satisfy Section 5." (id. at 80).

The Solicitor General informed the Court that he was not contending that economic power plus mere recommendation was sufficient to invalidate the plan:

> "Justice White: . . . That is the real nub of your argument, I gather, that companies can't recommend and at the same time have this power.
> "Mr. Friedman: They can't recommend it in the way in which they recommend it here. I think again it is a matter of degree basically" (id. at 81).

The Solicitor General made it clear that he was not asking the Court to predicate illegality upon the fact that there was a disparity of economic power between Atlantic and any of its dealers but rather upon the improper exercise of such power—not upon the mere existence of Atlantic's leases but rather upon the improper use to which Atlantic put them. Thus counsel stated:

> "* * * in this case we have the power and its use" (id. at 52).
> "[T]he basis on which the Commission's decision holding the Atlantic contract to be invalid rests is the power that Atlantic has, and the fact that in these circumstances the power is brought to bear" (id. at 82).

In speaking of the exercise of power, the Solicitor General emphasized that he was referring not to salesmanship but to pressure and coercion:

> "* * * in this case we have the power and its use. I don't think I have to take on the more difficult case, if we didn't have the actual use of the power.

"Justice Brennan: The power and the use with pressure, not power and the use meaning coercion?

"Mr. Friedman: Power and use meaning pressure, with some coercion" (id. at 52).

Upon further questioning, counsel reaffirmed the importance of Atlantic's use of its power:

"Justice White: And he [the Atlantic dealer] is coerced?

"Mr. Friedman: He is coerced, he is coerced in fact" (id. at 56).

* * *

"Justice Stewart: The pressure put upon them?

"Mr. Friedman: Coercive pressure, threats of lease cancellation" (id. at 58).

* * *

"Justice Stewart: They were under coercion?

"Mr. Friedman: They were under coercion" (ibid.).

The Solicitor General stressed that it was the totality of Atlantic's improper conduct which caused the proven anticompetitive effects:

"If I may, I would like to show what they actually did in this case, and then to suggest why there may very well be situations where eliminating some of the things they did in this case would not have the same adverse effect on the competition as the plan the Commission condemned" (id. at 48-49).

With respect to the matter of relief, the Solicitor General argued for the outlawing of TBA sales commission arrangements by Atlantic not because of their intrinsic illegality, and not because they could not be employed in a non-coercive manner, but solely because in his view such relief was a remedial necessity in order to remove the effects of Atlantic's longstanding coercive imposition of sponsored TBA upon its dealers. An order which merely enjoined Atlantic's coercive conduct, counsel urged, would be "an inadequate remedy" (id. at 64).

Justice White commented:

> "So that is your theory now, that is the Government's position is that without their coercion in the record, no case?" (id. at 64).

To which counsel responded:

> "I just don't know, Mr. Justice, whether without any evidence of coercion as I use it, pressure in that sense, I would think it would be very doubtful whether the Commission would have brought this case. But again, I don't know" (ibid.).

As we have seen, the Court accepted the government's invitation to decide the case on its specific facts.

3. Pursuant to the Mandate, the Court of Appeals Faithfully Applied Atlantic to the Facts of This Case

One week after Atlantic, the Court remanded this case for further proceedings "in light of Atlantic" (381 U.S. 739, 740 (1965)). At the oral argument on remand to the FTC, Commissioner Jones properly summed up the import of the Atlantic decision in the course of responding to complaint counsel's expression of a personal predilection for a per se rule:

> "I am not sure that is relevant, counsel, to whether these products have been imposed on unwilling pur- chasers, which I think is the vice of this arrangement. I think this is what the Court is saying when it says it is not per se illegal. It says it is illegal if it in fact coerces people to do something that they otherwise would not want to do, and therefore it keeps out non-sponsored TBA manufacturers" (A. VI. 63; emphasis added).[18]

Nevertheless, when it issued its decision half a year later, the Commission, disregarding the principles of Atlantic, ruled that the absence of coercion here was beside the point and held in effect that the sales commission plan was illegal per se.

The Court of Appeals, on the other hand, pointed out:

> "If the Supreme Court concluded that the sales commission was inherently illegal when entered into by a major oil company, it would have had no occasion to take cognizance of the coercive practices and no remand of this case would have been required. Yet the Atlantic opinion is replete with references to these practices and we cannot escape the conclusion that the overt coercive acts practiced by Atlantic

[18] Complaint counsel also evinced no difficulty in understanding that the gravamen of Atlantic was coercion. His brief to the Commission upon remand from this Court began with the following statement:

> "The Supreme Court in its recent Atlantic/Goodyear decision, affirming the 7th Circuit's decision and Order in the same case, relied upon that Court's finding of coercion based upon facts 'which are so carefully examined in the opinion of the Court of Appeals.'
> "Thereafter the Supreme Court commented on various other facets of the case including the relationship between the various parties; the plan and its competitive effect; the role and liability of the rubber company and scope of order." (Supplemental Brief of Counsel Supporting the Complaint, August 9, 1965, p. 1; emphasis added).

were deemed essential to the ultimate action of the Court. It is surely of some significance that in almost every page of the Atlantic opinion there is some such reference, e.g., 'overt acts,' 'overt coercive pressures,' 'direct and overt threats,' etc., 381 U.S. at 368, 373, 376.

"If the Supreme Court viewed its holding in Atlantic as treating contractual arrangements between the oil company and its dealers in and out of themselves as giving rise to controlling economic power, and that mere salesmanship without any coercion constituted unlawful exercise of such power, there would have been nothing to remand. The Supreme Court could have simply reversed and reinstated the Commission's order" (A.VI. 112-13; emphasis added).

In arguing that Atlantic was not predicated upon the use of coercion, petitioner quotes from this Court's opinion to the effect that "illegal 'effects on competition flowed from the contract itself.' (381 U.S. at 370)" (P. Br. 18). The quotation is totally out of context. The Court at that point was dealing with (1) the fact that "Firestone and Goodyear were excluded from selling to Atlantic's dealers in each other's territories" and (2) the fact that "even Goodyear wholesalers who were not authorized supply points were foreclosed from the Atlantic market." It was with respect to these two restraints that the Court stated:

"Both of these effects on competition flowed from the contract itself" (381 U.S. at 370; emphasis added).

Neither of these effects have anything whatever to do with Texaco's sales commission plan. Goodrich and Firestone are not excluded from any territory and there are no authorized supply points under Texaco's plan. Petitioner's quotation, accordingly, has absolutely no application here.[19]

In sum, coercion cannot be read out of Atlantic and the decision of the Court of Appeals on the matter of interpretation was entirely correct.

B. The Facts of This Case Do Not Fit Any Theory of Illegality

As previously noted, the Court of Appeals did not rest its decision on the absence of coercion (supra, pp. 19-20). It concluded, on the basis of an exhaustive review of the record and giving full effect to the Fifth Circuit's decision in Shell, that Texaco, unlike Atlantic and Shell, made clear that its dealers were free to accept or reject sponsored products without incurring Texaco's displeasure; and that Texaco practiced what it preached. This distinction between Texaco's conduct and that of the other two companies is critical, negating two essential elements of the government's case: (a) the exercise of dominant economic power and (b) resulting anticompetitive effects.

1. Texaco Did Not Exercise Dominant Economic Power Over Its Dealers to Cause Them to Buy Sponsored TBA

The Court of Appeals concluded that this record does not permit a finding that Texaco exercised economic power over its dealers (A.VI. 114-15). Petitioner, acknowledging this fact, argues:

> "While the court below set aside the Commission's ultimate finding that Texaco had exercised its dominant economic power, it did not disturb the bulk of the supporting findings with respect to promotion by Texaco of Goodrich TBA. In particular, the court did not question that the Texaco salesman continually carries the promotional message in his day-to-day contacts with dealers. Nor did the Court question the use of statistics on sponsored TBA purchases in evaluating a dealer's performance. But these are highly effective means of exercising economic power, for they go directly to the continuation of the economic relationship between Texaco and the dealer" (P. Br. 22).

The Court of Appeals did not question the use of statistics on sponsored TBA purchases in evaluating a dealer's performance for the simple reason that there was never any such use. Texaco never policed its dealers' TBA purchases in any manner[20] and such purchases have never been relevant to the continuation of the economic relationship between Texaco and any dealer. The only reports Texaco receives are accounting tabulations relating to the commission amounts owing to Texaco and used solely for accounting purposes (A.I. 460).[21] Thus, the statement in petitioner's brief quoted above is palpably erroneous.[22]

[20] The Court of Appeals found:

"(3) Dealer Policing and Credit Cards. In Atlantic the Supreme Court was confronted with evidence that Atlantic imposed quotas on dealers and effectively policed them by the use of a reporting system of purchases and sales of TBA. In the original appeal to this Court, the Commission contended that the quota and policing system were also used by Texaco. In the present appeal the Commission has retreated from this position. As to credit card policy, the Examiner carefully distinguished the Atlantic record from the instant record and significantly found that Texaco does permit dealers to charge non-sponsored TBA on its credit cards" (A.VI. 115).

This leaves, as the sole asserted basis for concluding that Texaco exercised economic power over its dealers, the bare fact that it recommended sponsored TBA to them. In view of the uncontested finding that Texaco's policy and practice have been to permit each dealer to choose whatever brand of TBA he may desire, this boils down to the contention that, as a matter of law, Texaco cannot recommend. A Texaco recommendation, in the government's view, constitutes an exercise of economic power because recommenda-

[21] Since Texaco's dealers, unlike Atlantic's and Shell's, were not limited in their sponsored TBA purchases to any single supply point but were free to purchase from any source, the possibility of accounting errors and omissions was substantial (A.II. 1314-16).

[22] While the brief offers no citation to support the statement at page 22, petitioner presumably is relying upon the exhibit appearing at A.IV. JAX 49, cited at page 7 of its brief. At page 7, after referring to the accounting reports received by Texaco, petitioner's brief states:

> "Thus Texaco is informed of each dealer's purchases, and considers this fact in evaluating service stations when deciding whether to renew their leases" (P. Br. 7; emphasis added). See also P. Br. 16.

JAX 49 is a letter from a Texaco employee responsible for leasing properties for Texaco from land owners. In evaluating whether Texaco, as a lessee, should renew a lease with such an owner, he had to know what relation the rental cost to Texaco bore to the amounts Texaco earned through use of the leased premises. In this exhibit the employee was requesting information on the TBA commissions earned at these leased properties so that these amounts could be included in the equation, "thereby reducing the cost" and possibly justifying Texaco's continued rental of the premises. This employee had nothing whatever to do with dealer evaluations and the matter was wholly unrelated to the relationship between Texaco and its dealers (A.I. 318-22, 324).

tion apprises the dealer that Texaco has an interest in his purchasing the sponsored product:

> "Where, as here, the effect of the promotional activities of the oil company is to make its dealers aware that the company has a direct interest in their purchase of sponsored TBA, it was reasonable and proper for the Commission to conclude that the oil company has exercised its economic power" (P. Br. 22; emphasis added).

To equate dealer awareness with exercise of economic power is tantamount to saying that no proof of exercise is necessary beyond the fact that the oil company entered into a sales commission agreement which it performed—i.e., that the agreement is per se unlawful, since it cannot be carried out lawfully. This is a far cry from the holding of Atlantic and it is not a permissible application of Section 5.

The contrast between this record and that in Atlantic on the question of exercise of dominant economic power is dramatic. None of the salient facts which this Court relied upon in finding that Atlantic had "marshaled its full economic power in a continuing campaign to force its dealers and wholesalers to buy" sponsored TBA (381 U.S. at 371) are present here.

a. Dealer Policing. Atlantic exercised its economic power through a complex program of dealer policing and surveillance to totally eliminate resistance to Goodyear TBA. Not a single policing device was ever employed by Texaco.

Thus Atlantic had dealer TBA quotas for sponsored products;[23] it controlled the placement of advertisements by its dealers;[24] it enlisted the help of Goodyear in identifying recalcitrant dealers;[25] it employed phantom inspectors;[26] and it received reports on its dealers to detect non-sponsored TBA purchases.[27] There has never been a [24] Atlantic controlled "all advertising on the premises of its dealers" and "permitted no signs or displays other than those of sponsored products" (381 U.S. at 368, 365 n. 7). Atlantic's authority to prevent dealers from advertising non-sponsored TBA "was a powerful weapon in preventing them from handling such products" (Brief of Solicitor General to the Supreme Court, Atlantic Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, at p. 42). Such authority derived from a provision in its dealer leases requiring the lessee to have Atlantic's prior written consent before placing any signs on or removing them from the leased premises (id. at 11). Atlantic's lessees were also required to sign a separate document defining standards of operations —the "Eleven Point Lease Letter"—which included a standard entitled "Display" (58 FTC at 338).

Texaco's leases contain no such provision and the record is replete with evidence that Texaco dealers freely advertised and displayed non-sponsored TBA. For example, in Texaco's Dallas Division, 233 pictures were taken of Texaco stations, at which there were displayed 40 different types of non-sponsored batteries (A.V. JAX 547-88).

[25] "Goodyear also furnished, this time at the specific request of Atlantic, a list of the latter's recalcitrant dealers who refused to be identified with the 'Goodyear program'. These lists Atlantic forwarded to its district offices, for 'appropriate action'. On one occasion a list of 46 such dealers was furnished Atlantic officials by Goodyear. [A]ll soon fell into line. This is a particularly impressive example of Goodyear's inclination to use Atlantic's power for its own benefit" (381 U.S. at 366, 374).

Goodrich never furnished, and Texaco never requested, any such list.

[26] Atlantic engaged "Phantom Customer Inspectors" to enforce its policing activities (58 FTC at 339; 331 F.2d at 396). The success of Atlantic's TBA efforts stemmed from "the effective policing of the plan" (381 U.S. 366).

Texaco had no such inspectors.

[27] This Court viewed Goodyear's reports to Atlantic, "when considered alongside the admitted overt coercive practices of Atlantic," as "a potent device in ensuring the success of the program" (381 U.S. at 374).

Goodrich reports to Texaco, by contrast, were simply used to provide a record of the commission amounts owing to Texaco.

finding of such policing by Texaco—and no such evidence exists in the record.

b. "Dual Solicitation." In Atlantic double-teaming was "heavily-relied" upon by the parties to "take stock orders, furnish initial price lists and project future quotas of purchases of Goodyear products" (381 U.S. at 365). In addition, this Court noted that " 'Goodyear thus appeared confident that the presence of an Atlantic salesman together with the Goodyear representative would render unnecessary any higgling or haggling over price before obtaining an initial order for TBA from Atlantic dealers' " (381 U.S. at 375).

Texaco's record on joint visits is quite another matter. First, there was no regular practice of having a Texaco salesman accompany a rubber company salesman; at most it was a sporadic practice undertaken, on occasion, for introductory purposes or when the dealer requested special assistance (A.I. 336, 377, 462-63, 723-24; A.II. 1361, 1540, 1650).[28]

Furthermore, Texaco's joint visits could have had no conceivable relation to the price of TBA. The Atlantic dealer was assigned to a designated supply point (58 FTC at 350). Hence he was compelled to purchase TBA at that particular wholesaler's price.[29] But since the Texaco dealer

[28] Moreover, since no territories were assigned exclusively to Goodrich or Firestone in the Texaco TBA program, the role of a Texaco salesman accompanying a salesman of one of these rubber companies necessarily was a neutral one.

[29] The Commission, in detailing the testimony of Atlantic dealer Balloran, quoted him to the effect that although he could have purchased Goodyear tires at a cheaper price from another Goodyear supplier, against his will he purchased from his designated supply point at a higher price (58 FTC at 361).

could select any source of supply he had complete freedom of bargaining with respect to price.[30]

c. "Advance Notification." The Texaco record discloses that advance notification was a rare occurrence—not a regular procedure (A.I. 373, 456-57; A.II. 1118, 1147).[31] Texaco would communicate with the rubber companies only after the new dealer himself had indicated his interest in a particular brand of sponsored TBA (A.I. 723; A.III. 2074). Moreover, such communications played little or no role in furthering sponsored TBA purchases. Thus, in the year prior to the Commission's hearings in Atlanta, Goodrich sold TBA to seven new Texaco dealers, only one of whom was identified by Texaco before Goodrich contacted him (A.II. 1148-51).

d. Geographical Supply Points. Atlantic assigned its dealers to a single point of TBA supply. By contrast, as the Court of Appeals noted, in this case "the Examiner found that as to sponsored TBA sales, each dealer did not buy exclusively from, and was not limited to, any particular supply point but was free to deal with any source he chose" (A.VI. 115).

[30] For example, Texaco dealer O'Brien, who was dissatisfied with his original source of sponsored products, switched to another source (A.II. 1427-29).

[31] Atlantic, of course, did not condemn "advance notification" as such. It was cited only as evidence of Goodyear's "close cooperation" with Atlantic in connection with making the order applicable to the rubber company (381 U.S. 373-74)—after the Court had determined from other evidence that Atlantic's conduct had violated Section 5.

e. Sales Practices. Again, in contrast to the all-out efforts of Atlantic to cause its dealers to purchase only sponsored TBA, here the Court of Appeals noted:

> "* * * the Commission itself in the order presently under review struck the Examiner's finding that Texaco 'salesmen were encouraged by [Texaco] management to write up orders for sponsored TBA without waiting for a formal request from a dealer' " (A.VI. 114).

f. Retaliation. In Atlantic, this Court pointed out:

> "The Commission stressed the evidence showing that 'Atlantic dealers have been orally advised by sales officials of the oil company that their continued status as Atlantic dealers and lessees will be in jeopardy if they do not purchase sufficient quantities of sponsored' tires, batteries and accessories. * * * Indeed, some dealers lost their leases after being reported for not complying with the Goodyear sales program" (381 U.S. at 366-67; emphasis added).

As the court below observed, this coercive context permeated the entire Atlantic program, contaminating even the oil company's neutral conduct (A.VI. 112). For the actual lease cancellations and other reprisals vividly demonstrated to Atlantic's dealers that, if they ignored a simple recommendation, they would ultimately be confronted with real coercion. In the case of Atlantic's dealers, the Seventh Circuit found that ". . . there exists a servitude caused by the coercive pressures which Atlantic exerts upon its dealers." Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. v. FTC, 331 F.2d 394, 400 (7th Cir. 1964). It noted: "In that setting, recommendation is tantamount to command" (id. at 401).

Texaco's program, by contrast, concededly was never accompanied by lease cancellations or threats of reprisals. If Texaco's dealers ignored TBA recommendations, as most of them did, there was no retaliation whatsoever.

g. "Effectiveness." The most "impressive evidence" of the effectiveness of Atlantic's exercise of its economic power was the remarkable switch of Atlantic dealers to Goodyear TBA (381 U.S. at 368). An Atlantic survey between 1946 and 1949 showed that 67% of its dealers preferred another brand of tires and 76% another brand of batteries (id. at 368-69). Yet in 1951, "[w]ithin seven months after the agreement Goodyear had signed up 96% and 98%, respectively, of Atlantic's dealers in two of the three areas assigned to it" (381 U.S. at 366). And, as the Commission's opinion pointed out, two months later "an Atlantic report showed that virtually all Atlantic dealers in Goodyear's assigned territory who were potential purchasers of TBA had signed contracts agreeing to handle Goodyear products" (58 F.T.C. at 346; emphasis added).

In diametrical opposition, although Texaco's program had been in effect for well over a decade before Atlantic's was even commenced, most Texaco dealers still did not purchase any sponsored TBA. The only comprehensive statistics in the record—and these were introduced by Commission counsel—demonstrate that approximately two-thirds of Texaco dealers do not regularly purchase any sponsored tires and 80% do not regularly purchase sponsored batteries and accessories (A.IV. JAX 177-180).[22]

[22] These percentages were compiled as follows: Texaco has 38,000 dealers, 30,000 of whom have a contractual relationship with Texaco (A.I. 426). The statistical charts in question contain data concerning the purchases of only those 30,000 dealers with whom Texaco

In the face of these statistics, it is small wonder that the Commission expressly discarded the "effectiveness" of Texaco's program as a basis for its decision (A.VI. 92).[33] has a contractual relationship—i.e., those dealers whom Commission counsel contended were subject to Texaco's control. These charts list the total number of Texaco's contract and lessee dealers (by division) and the number of these dealers (again by division) who purchased a dollar or more of TBA under each sales commission arrangement (id. at 430, 433-34). When a station bought from both sponsored TBA suppliers (Goodrich and Firestone), it was listed twice. By adding the number of stations purchasing under the Goodrich plan to the number of stations purchasing under the Firestone plan, we find that a maximum of 11,000 Texaco contract and lessee dealers bought a dollar or more of sponsored tires during any month of 1955 and 1956. (This 11,000 figure is inflated because many Texaco dealers bought from both Goodrich and Firestone and would therefore be counted twice in the computations.) Since there are approximately 30,000 Texaco contract and lessee dealers, it is evident that only one out of three Texaco dealers buys sponsored tires. And the comparable percentage for Texaco dealers purchasing sponsored batteries and accessories is a mere 20%.

[33] Although the Commission made no differentiation between Texaco's lessee and contract dealers for any other purpose—combining the two groups to show the number of outlets affected, the dollar volume of sponsored TBA purchases, and so forth—its only comment with respect to the statistics set forth in the text was to suggest that the contract dealers should be eliminated from consideration because "many contract dealers do not handle, and are not appropriate outlets for, TBA products" (A.VI. 92). Even if all of the 16,806 Texaco contract dealers are disregarded, however, it remains indisputable that Texaco did not force anyone to do anything against his will. It is simply impossible to square the theory that an oil company-dealer relationship is necessarily "inherently" coercive absent proof thereof, with the fact that of Texaco's 13,366 lessee dealers at the end of 1955 —after the program had been in effect for more than fifteen years— 11,913 didn't buy a single Goodrich battery and 11,202 didn't buy a single Firestone battery (A.IV. JAX 179-80)! Some 10,000 of 13,000 lessee dealers thus freely disregarded Texaco's recommendation and were wholly immune to its salesmanship.

Shell's practices were also markedly different from those of Texaco.[24] Although the Fifth Circuit rejected the Commission's finding of overt coercion by Shell, it pointed out that the evidence did "show the 'dramatic and immediate' anticompetitive pressures on dealers" (360 F.2d at 483-84). Not only were Shell's dealers not free to purchase whatever brand of TBA they desired from any source but, as the Court of Appeals found:

> "The evidence, however, shows that each Shell dealer was expected to choose between the two sponsored suppliers to the exclusion of all others. Once the dealer chose one company, the other company did not compete for any part of the dealer's business" (id. at 483; emphasis added).

Moreover, each Shell dealer was assigned to a specific wholesale supply point and no sales commissions were paid to Shell on TBA purchases from non-designated supply points, even though the brand acquired might be the same. Under

[24] For example, the Commission's Shell decision referred to the need for assessing the evidence against Shell

> " in the light of subpoenaed correspondence taken from the files of Shell relating to the TBA sales objectives of the Shell company. A memorandum entitled 'T. B. A. Situation' written by a Division Department Manager of Shell and addressed to his District Managers contains this statement:
> " Presently our dealers are purchasing far too many mongrel brands. Profits on batteries are very attractive to the dealers and the battery buying season is just ahead. Let's keep these low-priced and troublesome batteries out of our stations. Both our suppliers are well-stocked, and both Goodyear and Firestone have just recently announced attractive . . . terms on batteries. WE NEED THIS BATTERY BUSINESS!" 58 F.T.C. at 395 (emphasis added).

There is absolutely nothing comparable in the Texaco record.

these circumstances, "double teaming" was a regular and highly effective tactic since the Shell salesman was far from neutral.[35] Equally important, in contrast to Texaco, Shell policed its dealers to stamp out non-sponsored TBA and assigned sponsored TBA quotas to its dealers (id at 481). Thus, in Shell, there was definite evidence to support the conclusion that it exercised power over its dealers.

Here, per contra, the Court of Appeals drew the only conclusion that could be drawn from the record before it: that Texaco did not exercise dominant economic power over its dealers.[36]

2. Texaco's Sales Commission Plan Produced No Adverse Competitive Effects

As we have seen (supra, pp. 21-2), the Court of Appeals further found no basis in the record for concluding that Texaco's sales commission plan produced any adverse competitive effects (A.VI. 115-19).

Integral to this Court's determination of illegality in Atlantic was the showing that "the activity of Goodyear and Atlantic impaired competition at three levels of the tires, batteries and accessories industry"—manufacturing,

[35] The Fifth Circuit noted:

> "The activity considered most valuable and relied upon to bring fast results is 'double teaming' by salesmen from Shell and Firestone or Goodyear.  when a TBA representative finds difficulty in moving his line to a nominated dealer, he calls upon the Shell salesman to accompany him on his sales rounds  to no one's surprise, the team produces excellent results" (id. at 482 n. 24).

[36] In light of this finding, no purpose would be served by challenging that court's conclusion that Texaco had dominant economic power over its dealers.

wholesaling and retailing (381 U.S. at 370). But not a single anticompetitive effect found in Atlantic is present here.

First, in Atlantic there was a classic division of territories between Goodyear and Firestone:

> "• • • Firestone and Goodyear were excluded from selling to Atlantic's dealers in each other's territories" (381 U.S. at 370).

Atlantic's contracts made explicit provision for this division of territories (ibid.). Not only is there no like provision in the agreements between Texaco and Goodrich and Firestone, but the record is clear that in practice there was no division of territories.

The absence of any division of markets or customer allocation, together with the active competition of all TBA suppliers, including three substantial sponsored TBA manufacturers,[37] for the business of the local Texaco dealer, precludes the possibility that Texaco was handing over a "captive market" to Goodrich or to any other TBA supplier.[38]

Second, this Court pointed out that

> "• • • Goodyear wholesalers who were not authorized supply points, were foreclosed from the Atlantic market" (381 U.S. at 370).

No supply points were designated here. The Examiner expressly found that the Texaco dealer is "free to deal with any Goodrich supply point he may prefer" (A.I. 219; A.VI. 115, 118).

[37] In 1956 Texaco added U.S. Rubber as a third sponsored TBA company (A.II. 1136; A.III. 2371, 2373; A.VI. 55, 57).

[38] In Atlantic, the Court observed that "Goodyear had in effect purchased a 'captive market'" (381 U.S. at 375).

Third, this Court observed that Atlantic's

> "dealers could buy only at Goodyear's price" (381 U.S. at 370).

This adverse effect flowed directly from the territorial division of markets and the designation of supply points. Since the Texaco dealer wishing to purchase a sponsored TBA brand can freely select any supply source from three of the largest TBA manufacturers, price dictation is simply impossible in this case.

Finally, the foreclosure brought about by Atlantic's coercive conduct was virtually total:

> "They [Atlantic wholesalers and retailers] . . . were effectively foreclosed from selling brands other than Goodyear" (381 U.S. at 370).
>
> • • • •
> "[W]holesalers and manufacturers of competing brands . . . were foreclosed from the Atlantic market" (ibid.).

Here, by contrast, there is no foreclosure whatever. Since Texaco dealers are free to buy whatever TBA brands they desire, it necessarily follows that neither they nor competing suppliers are foreclosed from any market by reason of the operation of the Texaco sales commission plan. Thus, Texaco's plan imposes no anticompetitive restrictions on anyone.

Contrary to its position in Atlantic and Shell, the government here rests its case solely on the claim of foreclosure (P. Br. 23),[39] making no charge of any other anti-competitive effect. Since Texaco did not restrict the free choice of its dealers, the government is relegated to the argument that:

> "Once he recognizes that Texaco favors the purchase of sponsored products, the dealer, even if he is not coerced, no longer selects his brand of TBA solely on the basis of the comparative merits of the competing products. In the absence of strong countervailing factors the dealer is most likely to acquiesce in Texaco's recommendation to purchase the sponsored product" (P. Br. 23).

This, says the government, is because Texaco dealers, though not in fact restricted, may be concerned that Texaco would disapprove of their purchase of non-sponsored TBA (P. Br. 24).

We need not pause to quarrel at length with the government on the law[40] because the crushing answer to petition-

[39] In Shell, the Fifth Circuit found that Shell's dealers were not free to purchase any brand of TBA they desired to sell and the two rubber companies involved were also restricted from competing with each other for the business of Shell dealers.

> "As in Atlantic, competition was impaired at three levels. (a) Wholesalers and manufacturers of competing brands were foreclosed from Shell's market. Even Firestone dealers who were not authorized supply points were cut off from Shell's outlets. (b) Firestone and Goodyear were excluded from competing with each other after a dealer had selected his supplier. (c) Shell's dealers, who were limited to sponsored TBA were placed at a competitive disadvantage in having to compete with dealers free to stock several brands of TBA." Shell Oil Co. v. FTC, 360 F.2d 470, 484 (5th Cir. 1966).

[40] Atlantic will be searched in vain for any intimation, much less holding, that foreclosure can be bottomed on the groundless fears of dealers that the oil company will look askance at their purchase of non-sponsored TBA—no matter what the oil company says or does to make clear that its dealers are perfectly free to choose whatever brands of TBA they desire.

er's argument lies in the facts. All the government offers us is ipse dixit; there is nothing in the record to support its conjectures.

Where, we may ask, is there proof that Texaco dealers do not purchase TBA on the basis of the relative merits of the particular brands? That there must be "strong countervailing factors" before Texaco dealers will buy non-sponsored products?[41] That such dealers "feel constrained" to acquiesce in Texaco's recommendation? These deficiencies in the record cannot be remedied on appeal by the assumptions of counsel. That is especially true in this case because of the manner in which it was tried by the Commission's staff.

Prior to issuance of the complaint, the Commission had devoted at least five years to an investigation of Texaco's TBA practices. During that interval not only had documents been examined and statistics been collected but witnesses were interviewed and questionnaires were circulated. With all this investigation and with some 38,000 Texaco dealers to choose from, not a single Texaco dealer was called to testify by Commission counsel.

In the course of the proceedings Texaco moved to obtain the names and other particulars of those "possible prospective witnesses" with whom the Commission staff had communicated but who were not called (A.I. 28-9). After complaint counsel replied, asserting that the information was "confidential" and that Texaco could not be prejudiced by "information that is not introduced in the record" (id at 30), the Examiner denied Texaco's motion. Hiding behind this veil of secrecy, counsel would not even admit that questionnaires were sent to particular Texaco dealers or distributors who handled non-sponsored TBA, much less that they had replies to their inquiries (A.I. 327-29; A.III. 1780-81).

But the evidence Texaco developed from witnesses it called, who had received written inquiries from the Commission, leaves no doubt that the Commission staff had in fact canvassed an unknown number of Texaco dealers and distributors by mail and then did not call them as witnesses (A.III. 1780; 1793-94; 1846; 1873-74; A.V. JAX 429): Texaco obtained a copy of the response of one Texaco distributor who stated that he had purchased from Texaco for 42 years and that he had always handled non-sponsored TBA. He added:

> "We have never purchased any B. F. Goodrich or Firestone products. I have been asked if I would like to handle Firestone through the Texas Company with no pressure at all put on me to do it. The Texas Company has never high pressured me during the forty-two years I have deen dealing with them" (A.IV. JAX 428).

Under these circumstances, there can be no doubt but that a full presentation of what the Commission had investigated and uncovered would have been favorable to Texaco. This deliberate withholding of evidence material to the defense constituted a blatant violation of due process.[42]

[42] E.g., Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83, 87-88 (1963); Griffin v. United States, 87 U.S. App. D.C. 172, 183 F.2d 990 (D.C. Cir. 1950); United States ex rel. Meers v. Wilkins, 326 F.2d 135 (2d Cir. 1964); Barbee v. Warden, Maryland Penitentiary, 331 F.2d 842 (4th Cir. 1964).

Instead of putting Texaco dealers on the stand to testify to the facts, Commission counsel elected to offer the hearsay testimony of a few wholesalers each of whom stated he had difficulty selling non-sponsored TBA to one or two Texaco dealers because (those dealers allegedly said) Texaco was sponsoring other brands. This hearsay, aside from being incompetent to establish the fact,[43] was inherently unreliable[44] and, as the Court of Appeals found, [43] E.g., Buckeye Powder Co. v. E. I. Du Pont De Nemours Powder Co., 248 U.S. 55 (1918); Superior Engraving Co. v. NLRB, 183 F.2d 783, 792 (7th Cir. 1950), cert. denied, 340 U.S. 930 (1951).

[44] The excuses made by a buyer to be rid of an importunate seller are recognized as unreliable "in view of the risk of insincerity in a potential customer's statement why products were not being ordered." Herman Schwabe, Inc. v. United Shoe Mach. Corp., 297 F.2d 906, 914 n. 10 (2d Cir. 1962), cert. denied, 369 U.S. 865 (1962). Here, the government did not even introduce evidence that the dealers who allegedly made such statements sold only sponsored TBA. In fact, they didn't (A.III. 2014-15, 2016-17, 2026-27, 2170, 2198). Indeed one such dealer testified that, far from refusing to buy the non-sponsored merchandise offered, he had placed an order which the supplier had never even filled (A.II. 1579). See also, for denials of the alleged statements A.II. 1406-09, 1410, 1414, 1478-79, 1577, 1579-80, 1580-82, 1584, 1586-87, 1589-90, 1595; A.III. 1949.

Moreover, the hearsay statements attributed to these few Texaco dealers are unbelievable in the light of the uncontradicted testimony of the numerous dealer witnesses operating in the same regions as these dealers who testified to their understanding of Texaco's TBA policy and their open handling, display and advertising of non-sponsored TBA. For example, in the Chicago area, nine dealers so testified (A.II. 1472-77; 1486-88; 1494-97; 1501-04, 1505-06, 1508-09; 1511-13; 1520-26; 1575-78; 1585-87, 1590-91; 1597-1600). In the Georgia area similar testimony was elicited from six dealers (A.III. 1935-37; 1942-44; 1946-47; 1953-57, 1958; 1970-74; 1977; 1980-82). One of the dealers in the Georgia area, Conner, advertised his non-sponsored tires on radio programs three times a week (id. at 1981). See also A.V. JAX 438, 494-95, 496-99, 500, 501, 502, 503, 504-06, 507-08, 509, 510, 511 (photographs of displays of non-sponsored TBA in Chicago); JAX 600-06 (map of Chicago).

rebutted by overwhelming evidence to the contrary (A.VI. 118) (see record references at A.I. 131-44). At best, the wholesaler testimony portrayed "isolated instances" and did not constitute substantial evidence. It was in this sense that the Court of Appeals regarded it as not "representative" (ibid.).

This wholesaler testimony—hearsay to begin with, relating to isolated incidents and overwhelmingly rebutted—was patently insufficient to support a finding of foreclosure.

Furthermore, as pointed out above, four out of five Texaco dealers do not handle sponsored batteries or accessories and two out of three do not handle sponsored tires (supra, pp. 45-6). Since the vast majority of Texaco's dealers obviously do not feel constrained to acquiesce in Texaco's recommendation, there is no basis for assuming that the minority of dealers who purchase sponsored TBA do so for any reason other than genuine satisfaction with the quality and marketability of Goodrich and Firestone products and the service that goes with them.

Petitioner misses the point when it argues that the question is not whether all or most Texaco dealers "felt constrained" (P. Br. 25). The point is that the evidence does not establish that any Texaco dealer felt constrained. The mere fact that Texaco dealers bought substantial amounts of leading nationally advertised brands of TBA promoted by Texaco does not mean that their purchases were the result of a feeling of constraint. For aught that appears, Texaco dealer purchases of sponsored products corresponded with the general market penetration of such brands. In Atlantic, it was only after the fact of foreclosure was established by the oil company's pressure tactics [45] that the Court looked at the substantiality of the commerce foreclosed.[46] Here, per contra, there was no showing that sponsored purchases were made contrary to the dealer's will or that, without Texaco's promotional activities, the dealer would have purchased a non-sponsored brand. It is one thing to say that no market analysis is required in a case involving a practice analogous to a tying arrangement where substantial sales result; it is quite another merely to look at the substantiality of sales in a case where dealers are free to accept or reject a recommendation with no strings attached.

Failing all else, petitioner attempts to rely upon the experience acquired by the Commission in the other two "related" TBA cases [47] and it chides the Court of Appeals for ignoring this experience (P. Br. 10). The shoe is on the other foot. The Commission itself distinguished between the Texaco record and the other two when it condemned the Atlantic and Shell programs and simultaneously remanded Texaco to the examiner for the reception of addi-

[45] "Thus [referring to the establishment of the requisite adverse competitive effects] the Commission was warranted in finding that the effect of the plan was as though [emphasis is the Court's] Atlantic had agreed with Goodyear to require its dealers to buy Goodyear products and had done so" (381 U.S. at 370).

[46] "But just as the effect of this plan is similar to that of a tie-in [as established by the actual proof of anticompetitive effects], so is it unnecessary to embark upon a full-scale economic analysis of competitive effect. We think it enough that the Commission found that a not insubstantial portion of commerce is affected" (id. at 371; emphasis added).

[47] The Commission is said to have had

> " the benefit of the experience it had gained through its comprehensive studies of the use and effect of such arrangements made in the related Atlantic and Shell cases" (P. Br. 12).

tional evidence which was never forthcoming (58 FTC 1179, 1183; A.I. 179, 197). The Commission does not know anything more about the effect of TBA plans today than when it took this action in 1961. As the Solicitor General recognized in his oral argument in Atlantic (supra, pp. 31-3), the fact is that not all TBA sales commission plans are alike in their use and effect. The Court of Appeals was eminently correct in holding that Texaco's plan differed markedly in both respects from those of Atlantic and Shell.

As for the Commission's argument that all three oil companies should be accorded equal treatment (i.e., subjected to a sweeping cease and desist order), the short and compelling answer was provided by the Court of Appeals:

> "But simply because Texaco is in the same line of business does not mean it must suffer the pain of the misdeeds of other oil companies; this would indeed be guilt by association" (A.VI. 119).

Conclusion

Nothing in Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act prevents Texaco, pursuant to a sales commission agreement with a rubber company, from promoting the sale of sponsored TBA to its dealers when those dealers are free, they know they are free and they repeatedly exercise their freedom to purchase non-sponsored products without jeopardizing their dealership status or otherwise incurring Texaco's ill will.

What the Commission is attempting to do here is to outlaw the sales commission method of distribution, a business practice antedating this country's existence and never interdicted by Congress—even though there is nothing intrinsically unfair, oppressive or anticompetitive about the practice and it has never been abused by Texaco. In a word, the Commission is seeking to usurp the legislative function by amending Section 5 for purposes of this case. The proper forum for its efforts is Congress not the courts.

If the Commission had observed fundamental requirements of fair play, if it had been candid with the courts, if it had followed its own mandate and that of this Court, if it had not predetermined the result by exalting uniformity of treatment among industry members above individual guilt or innocence, this matter would have been terminated years ago. The very integrity of the administrative process demands dismissal of the complaint.

For all of the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the Court of Appeals should be affirmed.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, PETITIONER

v.

TEXACO, INC. AND THE B. F. GOODRICH COMPANY

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the court of appeals (App., Vol. VI, 106–120) is reported at 383 F. 2d 942. The opinion (App., Vol. VI, 77–93) and final order (App., Vol. VI, 94–96) of the Federal Trade Commission are not officially reported. The prior opinions of the court of appeals (App., Vol. VI, 1–20) and of this Court are reported at 336 F. 2d 754 and 381 U.S. 739. The prior opinions of the Federal Trade Commission (App., 175–186; 302–303) are reported at 58 F.T.C. 1176 and 62 F.T.C. 1172.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the court of appeals was entered on September 25, 1967 (App., Vol. VI, 121). On December 14, 1967, Mr. Chief Justice Warren extended the time for filing a petition for a writ of certiorari to and including January 25, 1968. The petition was filed on the latter date and was granted on March 11, 1968 (App., Vol. VI, 122). The jurisdiction of this Court rests on 28 U.S.C. 1254(1).

QUESTION PRESENTED

Whether, under the standards set forth in Atlantic Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 381 U.S. 357, the Federal Trade Commission was warranted in concluding that it is an unfair method of competition in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act for a major oil company, which has dominant economic power over its dealers, and a major rubber company, to enter into an agreement whereby the oil company promotes and takes steps to induce its dealers to purchase the rubber company's tires, batteries and automotive accessories, in return for a commission on all such sales.

STATUTE INVOLVED

Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. 45, provides, in pertinent part:

> Unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce, are declared unlawful. * * * The Commission is empowered and directed to prevent persons, partnerships, or corporations * * * from using unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce.

STATEMENT

This is one of three related proceedings in which the Federal Trade Commission has prohibited the use of a sales-commission arrangement between a major oil company and a leading producer of tires, batteries and automotive accessories ("TBA") for the distribution of TBA through the retail gasoline service stations of the oil company. Under such an arrangement, an oil company agrees to promote the sale to its dealers of a tire company's TBA (known as "sponsored TBA") in return for a commission on the goods sold. In Atlantic Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 381 U.S. 357, this Court sustained the Commission's order against the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company and the Atlantic Refining Company. In Shell Oil Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 360 F. 2d 470, certiorari denied, 385 U.S. 1002, the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, subsequent to this Court's decision in Atlantic, sustained the Commission's order against the Shell Oil Company and the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company. In both of these cases the respondent oil and tire companies were enjoined from participating in any such sales commission arrangements with any other company.

The present case involves the validity of sales-commission arrangements for the distribution of TBA that the respondent Texaco, Inc. ("Texaco") has entered into with respondent B. F. Goodrich Co. ("Goodrich") and with the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company ("Firestone").[1] The Commission held that these arrangements were unfair methods of competition and unfair acts and practices in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act and entered a cease-and-desist order. The Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit set aside the order and instructed the Commission to dismiss the complaint.[2]

A. THE TEXACO-GOODRICH ARRANGEMENT

Texaco, one of the nation's largest petroleum companies, sells its products to approximately 30,000 service stations or about 16.5 percent of all service stations in the United States (App. Vol. I, 221). Texaco's retail dealers are primarily divided into two categories: lessee dealers who lease their service stations directly from Texaco, and contract dealers who either own their own stations or lease them from third parties. The usual lease is for a term of one year, and thereafter from year to year, subject to termination by either party at the end of any year on ten days' notice. The lease contains so-called "house-keeping" provisions relating to the use, maintenance and general appearance of the station. Breach of any provision of the lease by the lessee constitutes grounds for immediate termination by Texaco without notice to the lessee (App., Vol. IV, 20–21). Contract dealers lease pumps and other equipment from Texaco.

[1] Firestone is subject to a final order of the Commission prohibiting its use of a sales commission plan with any oil company. See Shell Oil Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 360 F. 2d 470, 474 (C.A. 5), certiorari denied, 385 U.S. 1002.

[2] That court also had reversed a prior cease-and-desist order against these companies (62 FTC 1197; 336 F. 2d 754). The Commission petitioned for a writ of certiorari and, following the decision in the companion Atlantic Refining case, the Court granted the petition, vacated the judgment of the court of appeals and directed that the case be remanded to the Commission for further proceedings in light of Atlantic. Federal Trade Commission v. Texaco, Inc., 381 U.S. 739. The order here under review was issued pursuant to this remand.

Both lessee and contract dealers enter into "agreements of sale" with Texaco for the purchase of gasoline and other petroleum products; the agreement prescribes annual minimum and maximum purchases at current prices. This agreement also runs from year to year and is terminable upon 30 days' notice. In addition, it is automatically cancelled if the lease of a dealer is terminated and may be terminated by either party for failure of the other party to perform strictly any of the obligations (App., Vol. IV, 22–23). All of these contracts apparently are standard documents prepared by Texaco.

Goodrich is one of the four largest rubber companies in the United States. It manufactures a full line of tires, tubes and related products and purchases for resale batteries labelled BFG and a full line of automotive accessories which are sold under their own nationally advertised brand names. It distributes these products through company-owned stores, independent dealers and thousands of service stations throughout the United States. (App., Vol. I, 217–218, 304).

The Texaco-Goodrich agreement, which was entered into in 1943, provides that Goodrich will pay Texaco a commission on all purchases of Goodrich TBA by Texaco consignees, dealers or distributors in "consideration of the aid to be given and the services to be rendered by your [Texaco's] sales organization in connection with promoting the sale of Goodrich products" (App., Vol. IV, 6).[1] The commission is 10 percent on purchases of sponsored TBA by Texaco retail dealers and 7.5 percent on purchases by its wholesale distributors. The total volume of sponsored TBA sold to Texaco dealers by Goodrich and Firestone in the period 1952–1956 was $245 million; in 1956 alone it was almost $59 million. Consequently, the total TBA commissions received by Texaco in the period 1952–1956 were almost $22 million (App., Vol. I, 209–210).

Texaco has engaged in the following promotional activities, among others, in performing its obligations under the sales commission agreements: (a) when interviewing prospective dealers, Texaco emphasized the importance of TBA and recommended sponsored products (App., Vol. I, 208, 216); (b) Texaco's sales campaign materials and literature discussing the importance of TBA utilized and recommended sponsored products (App., Vol. I, 208, 345–346, 361–362); (c) Goodrich was notified of new dealers and stations before they began operation, thus enabling Goodrich to solicit their business in advance of competitors (App., Vol. I, 208, 399–400, 511, 674, 701–702, 723; Vol. VI, 90); (d) Texaco salesmen promoted sponsored TBA in their day-to-day contacts with the dealers (App., Vol. I, 329, 412, 526–527; Vol. VI, 90); and (e) Texaco and tire company salesmen called on dealers together (App., Vol. I, 528, 680).

Moreover, Goodrich reported each dealer's individual purchases of sponsored TBA to Texaco (App., Vol. I, 316–317, 460; Vol. IV, 70E–70F, 74–78). Thus Texaco is informed of each dealer's purchases, and considers this fact in evaluating service stations when deciding whether to renew their leases (App., Vol. IV, 49; Vol. VI, 91).

B. THE COMMISSION'S DECISION

After reconsideration of the record pursuant to this Court's remand order (381 U.S. 739), the Commission issued a new opinion holding the sales commission plan to be an unfair method of competition. The Commission began by analyzing this Court's decision in Atlantic Refining. The essence of that decision, according to the Commission, was that "while coercive practices aggravate the restraint imposed by the sales commission plan, it is the oil company's power over its dealers, derived from the contractual relationship between them, and the utilization of that power through the performance of the promotional services required by the sales commission agreement, which renders the sales commission plan unlawful" (App., Vol. VI, 84). The Commission then ruled that the economic dependence of Texaco dealers is the same as that of Atlantic dealers, noting that the contractual relationships were almost identical in both cases (App., Vol. VI, 89–90). The Commission concluded that it was unnecessary for the oil company to engage in "overtly coercive tactics" in order effectively to exercise its dominant economic power over its dealers; it stated that the consequence of Texaco's promotional activities was to "impress upon Texaco dealers, through constant repetition and in a variety of ways, that Texaco, whose favor the dealers must court, has a strong interest in their purchase of the sponsored TBA products" (App., Vol. VI, 90).

The Commission reviewed generally the extent to which the sales-commission arrangement had been successful, but concluded that no extensive economic analysis was required since the amount of commerce involved was substantially greater than that in the Atlantic case. It pointed to evidence that competing sellers of TBA had been foreclosed from the Texaco service station market, including testimony by competing TBA suppliers that the Texaco dealers did not feel that they were free to buy from non-sponsored suppliers (App., Vol. VI, 91).

The Commission's order, identical in scope to that approved by this Court in Atlantic, enjoined both Texaco and Goodrich from entering into a TBA sales-commission contract with any other company (App., Vol. VI, 94-96).

C. THE COURT OF APPEALS' DECISION

The court of appeals set aside the order and instructed the Commission to dismiss the complaint. The court read the Atlantic decision as establishing "three essential components" for a sales-commission agreement to be illegal: (a) the oil company's dominant economic power over its dealers; (b) exercise of that power; and (c) anticompetitive effects of using that power (App., Vol. VI, 110).

The court upheld the Commission's conclusion that Texaco has dominant economic power over its dealers (App., Vol. VI, 111–112, 119). On the question of exercise of that power, the court held:

> We can glean nothing from the utterances of the Supreme Court which alters the basic rule that a finding of coercion is the threshold requirement of a determination of exercise of dominant economic power. [App., Vol. VI, 112].

The court compared each of Texaco's promotional practices with those used by Atlantic and concluded that Texaco's practices could not be found to be coercive (App., Vol. VI, 114–115). Nor, in the court's judgment, did any of these practices indicate illegal exploitation by Texaco of its service station market. Therefore, it concluded, "we do not find that Texaco used its controlling economic power to compel its dealers to purchase sponsored TBA." (App., Vol. VI, 115). On the question of competitive effect, the court held that "there is an absence of substantial evidence which supports a finding of anticompetitive effects." (App., Vol. VI, 119). Since the court believed that the Commission had had sufficient opportunity to develop the record but had failed to do so adequately, it ordered the Commission to dismiss the complaint.* (App., Vol. VI, 119–120).

*The Commission has not challenged the action of the court of appeals in setting aside paragraphs 5 and 6 of the order against Texaco, which prohibited the latter from overtly coercing its dealers (App., Vol. I, 231–232; Vol. VI, 95, 119 (n. 16)).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The Commission correctly concluded that the sales-commission arrangement between Texaco and Goodrich is an unfair method of competition. The court of appeals in setting aside the Commission's order made two fundamental errors. First, it ignored the broad authority of the Federal Trade Commission to define unfair methods of competition. Second, it misapplied this Court's decision in Atlantic Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 381 U.S. 357, and required the Commission to predicate a Section 5 violation in this case upon proof of promotional practices which were virtually identical to those found in Atlantic. The court below thus ignored both the experience with the anticompetitive potential of sales-commission agreements which the Commission has gained in three related cases involving this issue and this Court's expressed concern in Atlantic with the adverse effects of the widespread use of such agreements.

The Commission determined that Texaco has dominant economic power over its dealers, a finding accepted by the court of appeals. Within this framework of dominant economic power, the Commission concluded that Texaco's promotional activities in support of sponsored TBA necessarily make the dealers aware of Texaco's interest in the purchase of such TBA. The Commission thus recognized that the basic evil of the sales-commission plan is the exercise of the oil company's economic power, not the particular means by which it is exercised. The court of appeals, however, thought that a finding of coercion was required and therefore concluded that Texaco had not illegally exercised its economic power. Such a requirement is based on a misinterpretation of Section 5 and is plainly inconsistent with the standards set forth in Atlantic.

The Commission was also correct in concluding that the Texaco-Goodrich agreement has anticompetitive effects. The Commission was not obliged to undertake an extended economic analysis. It is sufficient that a "not insignificant" amount of commerce is involved in the sales-commission scheme. Since the result of the sales-commission arrangements is to preclude dealers from selecting TBA solely on the comparative merits of the competing brands, these arrangements interfere with the free functioning of the market. The sales-commission arrangements make it more difficult for smaller TBA producers and distributors to compete in the substantial market represented by service stations. This Court in Atlantic was concerned with such anticompetitive consequences of the widespread use of sales-commission agreements, not with the particular practices used by Atlantic and Goodyear in performing them.

ARGUMENT[*]

THE COMMISSION CORRECTLY HELD THAT TEXACO'S SALES-COMMISSION ARRANGEMENTS CONSTITUTE UNFAIR METHODS OF COMPETITION, IN VIOLATION OF SECTION 5 OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ACT

This Court has consistently recognized and upheld the broad discretion of the Federal Trade Commission to define unfair methods of competition under Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. See, [*] Although for ease of presentation our argument is focused primarily on the arrangements between Texaco and Goodrich, it applies equally to those between Texaco and Firestone.

e.g., Federal Trade Commission v. Brown Shoe Co., 384 U.S. 316, 321–322; Federal Trade Commission v. Motion Picture Adv. Co., 344 U.S. 392, 394–395. The breadth of this authority is particularly relevant here because, in concluding that the Texaco sales-commission arrangements constitute unfair methods of competition, the Commission had the benefit of the experience it had gained through its comprehensive studies of the use and effect of such arrangements made in the related Atlantic and Shell cases. The Commission concluded (App., Vol. VI, 92) that "the gravest danger to competition presented by the sales commission plans here as in Atlantic is in their capacity for hindering competition between sponsored and non-sponsored TBA suppliers." It ruled (id. 89) that the "economic dependence of Texaco dealers is no different from that of Atlantic dealers"; and that (id. 90) "Texaco's promotional efforts in carrying out its sales commission agreement with Goodrich and Firestone constitute a forceful exercise of its economic power over its dealers. Its consequence is to impress upon Texaco dealers, through constant repetition and in a variety of way, that Texaco, whose favor the dealer must court, has a strong interest in their purchase of the sponsored TBA products." In the light of these findings and the substantial volume of TBA sales made by Texaco dealers under the sales commission arrangements (see supra, p. 6; infra, pp. 16–17, 23), the Commission was justified in concluding that those arrangements resulted in the same kind of injury to competition that characterized the Atlantic and Shell sales commission plans, and were equally illegal. What this Court said in Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 333 U.S. 683, 720, is peculiarly appropriate here:

> We are persuaded that the Commission's long and close examination of the questions it here decided has provided it with precisely the experience that fits it for performance of its statutory duty. The kind of specialized knowledge Congress wanted its agency to have was an expertness that would fit it to stop at the threshold every unfair trade practice—the kind of practice which, if left alone, "destroys competition and establishes monopoly." * * *

As we show below, the court of appeals here took far too narrow a view of the Commission's authority, and misinterpreted this Court's Atlantic decision. In Atlantic this Court held that in reviewing the agency's determination that a sales-commission arrangement is an unfair method of competition, the court "is limited to determining whether the Commission's decision 'has warrant in the record and a reasonable basis in law'" and that "necessarily 'we give great weight to the Commission's conclusion. * * *'" (381 U.S. at 367–368). Under these standards the court of appeals should have upheld the Commission's decision.

That decision rested on three ultimate findings: (a) that Texaco has dominant economic power over its dealers; (b) that in promoting sponsored TBA it exercises that power in ways that make the dealers aware of its interest in their purchase of such TBA; and (c) that substantial anticompetitive effects result from Texaco's performance of the agreements. The record adequately supports each of these findings and under Atlantic they justify the Commission's conclusion that the Texaco sales-commission arrangements constitute unfair methods of competition in violation of Section 5.

A. TEXACO HAS DOMINANT ECONOMIC POWER OVER ITS DEALERS

The Commission found that Texaco retail service station dealers are economically dependent upon Texaco as a result of both the contractual relationship between the dealer and the oil company and the latter's economic power (App., Vol. IV, 89–90). The court of appeals upheld the Commission's conclusion that Texaco has dominant economic power over its dealers (App., Vol. VI, 111–112, 119). While this fact, therefore, is established, it is instructive to examine briefly the nature of that power in order to place the sales-commission arrangement in perspective.

The specific factors from which an oil company derives economic power over its dealers include control over oil and gas supply, short-term leases, sales agreements and equipment loans, control over advertising, leverage from financial promotion, and house-keeping requirements of leases. These factors are inherent in the petroleum distribution system and create a situation where the individual retail dealer is completely dependent for his economic survival on the oil company with which he deals. See Atlantic, 381 U.S. at 368; Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13; United States v. Sun Oil Co., 176 F. Supp. 715 (E.D. Pa.). Two of the most significant elements of the oil company's economic power in promoting sponsored TBA are its complete discretion as to renewal of leases and sales agreements and the general "housekeeping" requirements concerning the station's use, maintenance and appearance. As noted above, supra, pp. 4-5, the Texaco lease authorizes Texaco to terminate (1) at the end of any year on ten days' notice, or (2) for any breach in the "housekeeping" requirements. The sales agreement authorizes Texaco to cancel on 30 days' notice at the end of any year. It is only natural that the dealer will be extremely anxious to maintain a harmonious relationship with Texaco, and with its salesmen who represent his direct contact with the company, in order to ensure renewal of the agreements each year.

B. TEXACO'S ACTIVITIES IN PROMOTING SPONSORED TBA ARE AN EXERCISE OF ITS ECONOMIC POWER OVER ITS DEALERS

1. The Commission detailed a number of practices in which Texaco engaged to promote the purchase of sponsored TBA by its dealers (see supra, p. 6). It concluded that the "consequence [of these activities] is to impress upon Texaco dealers, through constant repetition and in a variety of ways, that Texaco, whose favor the dealers must court, has a strong interest in their purchase of the sponsored TBA products" (App., Vol. VI, p. 90). This finding is amply supported by the record. The Commission pointed out that "perhaps [the] most effective" factor was the promotion of sponsored TBA by Texaco salesmen in their regular contacts with the dealers (App., Vol. VI, 90-91). Since the salesman is the primary link between the dealer and the company upon which he is so dependent, the salesman's continual promotion of a particular product necessarily will have substantial influence upon the dealer's decision that is unrelated to the relative merits of the product in comparison with competing, unsponsored brands.

These personal contacts by salesmen are supplemented and reinforced by other techniques that remind its dealers constantly of Texaco's interest in their choice of sponsored TBA: sponsored TBA is recommended in Texaco's literature and sales campaign materials (App., Vol. I, 345–346, 361–362); classes and sales demonstrations for dealers utilize only sponsored TBA (App., Vol. I, 361–362; Vol. II, 1258); Texaco emphasizes to prospective dealers the importance of TBA and endorses sponsored products (App., Vol. I, 208, 216).[8]

Texaco can ascertain the size of its dealers' purchases of sponsored TBA from reports it receives from Goodrich and Firestone detailing TBA sales to individual dealers (App., Vol. I, 316–317, 460; Vol. IV, 70E–70F, 74–78). Sales of sponsored TBA, as well as sales of petroleum products, are "a strong" factor in determining whether to renew a particular station lease (App., Vol. IV, 49). It is hardly surprising, in light of Texaco's dominant economic power, that these

[8] Although Texaco purported to operate under a policy, articulated on June 1, 1948, that its dealers were independent businessmen who were not to be forced to handle any particular merchandise (App., Vol. I, 218), this "policy" was only occasionally and informally communicated to the dealers by the Texaco salesmen, and was communicated to a dealer in writing only after the dealer had established himself as a successful marketer of lubricating oil. (Ibid.) promotional activities produce substantial purchases of sponsored products by Texaco dealers (see supra, p. 6).

2. The court of appeals, however, believed that coercion was a necessary prerequisite to a finding of exercise of economic power. After comparing in detail the evidence in the present case with the techniques employed in the Atlantic case for bringing to bear the oil company's economic power upon its dealers, the court concluded that none of the promotional activities utilized here was necessarily coercive and that there was no substantial evidence of actual coercion by Texaco. It therefore held that Texaco had not exercised its concededly dominant economic power. This conclusion rested on a serious misreading of the Atlantic Refining decision.[6]

While both the Commission and the court of appeals in Atlantic had found that the oil company had engaged in coercive practices, nothing in this Court's opinion indicated that the use of coercion was the factor which made the arrangement illegal. On the contrary, the Court expressly noted that the Commission's view was that coercive practices were merely "symptomatic of a more fundamental restraint of trade" (381 U.S. at 361) and that illegal "effects on competition flowed from the contract itself." (381 U.S. at 370.) The basic vice of the sales commission plan involved in Atlantic was identical to that of the plan in the present case: "the utilization of economic power in one market to curtail competition in another" (381 U.S. at 369). Cf. Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1.

The fundamental evil here, as in Atlantic, was the use of the oil company's economic power, not the particular means—whether labeled "coercion" or not—by which it was exercised. But the court of appeals permitted this basic economic vice to be obscured by its pre-occupation with the particular techniques used by Atlantic and Goodyear, the trappings in which the vice was manifested in Atlantic. Such an approach to review of the Commission's determinations under Section 5 overlooks the fact that the Commission has been entrusted with the interpretation and application of an economic regulatory statute for the benefit of the entire competitive economy; it constricts the Commission's function to a search for specific acts of culpable conduct as if the agency were administering punishment under a criminal code (see, e.g., App., Vol. VI, 119).

This is the same fundamental misconception of the Commission's role under Section 5 which the majority of this Court adopted in Federal Trade Commission v. Gratz, 253 U.S. 421, 427, over the strong dissent of Mr. Justice Brandeis. The Court recently unanimously rejected the Gratz approach in Federal Trade Commission v. Brown Shoe Co., 384 U.S. 316, 320-321, where it pointed out that "it is now recognized" that "the dissent of Mr. Justice Brandeis in Gratz" more accurately defines the Commission's "broad powers to declare trade practices unfair." In Gratz Mr. Justice Brandeis stated (253 U.S. at 434-435):

> Instead of attempting to inflict punishment for having done prohibited acts, * * * [Section 5] undertook to preserve competition through supervisory action of the Commission. * * * If it discovered that any business concern had used any practice which would be likely to result in public injury—because in its nature it would tend to aid or develop into a restraint of trade—the Commission was directed to intervene, before any act should be done or condition arise violative of the Anti-Trust Act.

This case presents a graphic illustration of the harmful consequences which can result from the Gratz view which the court of appeals took of the Commission's authority. In three related proceedings (see supra, p. 3), the Commission determined that, when oil companies have dominant economic power over their dealers, their promotion of sponsored TBA under a sales commission arrangement constitutes an unfair method of competition under Section 5 because of its pronounced tendency to foreclose competition in the marketing of TBA. In two of those proceedings, judicial review has been completed and Atlantic Refining Company, Shell Oil Company, Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company and Firestone Tire and Rubber Company stand permanently enjoined from participating in any such sales-commission arrangements with any other company. But in the present case, the court below held that Texaco and Goodrich may continue to use essentially identical sales-commission promotional arrangements because the court perceived differences in the indicia of exercise, or in the degree of exercise, of Texaco's power over its dealers.

Thus "without making any investment in distributional facilities or TBA inventory" (App., Vol. VI, 84–85), Texaco would be permitted to continue to receive substantial commissions for promoting the sale of TBA to its service stations while, for example, its smaller competitor, Atlantic Refining Company, is barred from the same economic opportunity; and similarly Goodrich would be allowed to continue to utilize the power which major oil companies have over their dealers in order to obtain advantages in the marketing of Goodrich TBA which are denied to Goodrich's competitors.[1] This is precisely the "arbitrary and inequitable" situation which the Commission pointed out would "create a harmful competitive imbalance among the leading firms" in both the oil and tire industries (App., Vol. VI, 88). Section 5 does not limit the Commission's power to substituting a new competitive imbalance for the original one under which the large tire companies had an advantage over their smaller competitors. This Court's recognition that such distortions of the Commission's function inevitably followed from the Gratz interpretation surely has been one important reason for the explicit repudiation of that interpretation (Brown Shoe Co., supra, 384 U.S. at 320–321) and the adoption, instead, of a broader view of the Commission's authority, soundly based on the legislative history of Section 5 (see Atlantic Refining Co., supra, 381 U.S. at 367). The Commission was amply warranted in ignoring the essentially unimportant distinctions in the manner in which the three oil companies exercised their power over their dealers and instead focusing on the economic consequences of such exercise.

[1] Indeed, the result is completely anomalous in the case of Firestone (with which Texaco also has a sales-commission plan), since the decision below approves the very type of arrangements which the Fifth Circuit's decision in Shell-Firestone bars Firestone from utilizing.

"3. In short, the Commission has determined in these three cases that it is an unfair method of competition forbidden by Section 5 for an oil company with dominant power over its dealers to exercise that power under a sales-commission agreement by means of promotional activities which, because of the relationship between the company and the dealers, deny them complete freedom of choice in making their purchases. The Commission's conclusion was justified, as this Court recognized in Atlantic Refining, because of "the destructive effect on commerce that would result from the widespread use of these contracts by major oil companies and suppliers" (381 U.S. at 371). Cf. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 337 U.S. 293.

While the court below set aside the Commission's ultimate finding that Texaco had exercised its dominant economic power, it did not disturb the bulk of the supporting findings with respect to promotion by Texaco of Goodrich TBA. In particular, the court did not question that the Texaco salesman continually carries the promotional message in his day-to-day contacts with dealers. Nor did the court question the use of statistics on sponsored TBA purchases in evaluating a dealer's performance. But these are highly effective means of exercising economic power, for they go directly to the continuation of the economic relationship between Texaco and the dealer. Where, as here, the effect of the promotional activities of the oil company is to make its dealers aware that the company has a direct interest in their purchase of sponsored TBA, it was reasonable and proper for the Commission to conclude that the oil company has exercised its economic power.

Texaco has been paid substantial commissions without being required to make any investment in distributional facilities or inventory, and "without relieving the TBA supplier of the burden of sales, distribution, and service" (App., Vol. VI, 84–85). In referring to virtually identical "substantial overriding commissions" in Atlantic, this Court said (381 U.S. at 376):

> It is difficult to escape the conclusion that there would have been little point in paying substantial commissions to oil companies were it not for their ability to exert power over their wholesalers and dealers . . .

See, also, Shell Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Comm., supra, 360 F. 2d at 482.

C. TEXACO'S PROMOTION OF SPONSORED TBA UNDER THE SALES COMMISSION AGREEMENT CAUSES SIGNIFICANT ANTICOMPETITIVE CONDITIONS IN THE TBA MARKET

The use of a sales-commission promotional arrangement for the distribution of TBA results in the foreclosure of service station outlets as a market for the sale of products of competing TBA distributors. In Atlantic this Court held that it was not necessary for the Commission to engage in extensive economic analysis of the effects of a sales-commission plan once it was determined that a "not insubstantial" amount of commerce is involved. 381 U.S. at 371. Since sales of sponsored TBA to Texaco dealers in one year exceeded total sales to Atlantic dealers during a six-year period (App., Vol. I, 209–210; Vol. VI, 89), the substantiality of commerce requirement was clearly satisfied in this case.

Once [illegible] recognizes that Texaco favors the purchase of sponsored products, the dealer, even if he is not coerced, no longer selects his brand of TBA solely on the basis of the comparative merits of the competing products. In the absence of strong countervailing factors the dealer is most likely to acquiesce in Texaco's recommendation to purchase the sponsored product. See Shell Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, supra, 360 F. 2d at 486. As in the case of tying agreements, the selection of the sponsored product is not the result of "a better product or a lower price" but is influenced by "power or leverage in another market." Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. United States, supra, 356 U.S. at 6. This type of interference with free competitive conditions flows directly from the sales-commission agreement itself. Atlantic Refining, supra, 381 U.S. at 370.

The fact that some dealers may nonetheless purchase nonsponsored products does not negate the Commission's conclusion that use of the sales-commission plan by oil companies which exercise dominant economic power over their dealers has a significant adverse effect on the free play of competition. The record in this case and the Commission's experience in other cases support the Commission's conclusion that a large number of dealers, subject to repeated reminders that Texaco recommended their purchase of sponsored TBA, would not exercise free choice based on the merits of competing products. This conclusion was supported by testimony of sellers of nonsponsored TBA that they were unable to sell to particular Texaco service stations because of the dealers' expressed concern that Texaco would disapprove of their purchase of nonsponsored products. (App., Vol. I, 565, 567, 653–655, 681, 686, 702; Vol. II, 1043–1044, 1065, 1196, 1288–1289).

The court of appeals, however, said that it could not regard such testimony as "representative" (App., Vol. VI, 118):

> • • • [S]uch a conclusion is not supported by substantial evidence, except in isolated instances which were generally contradicted by overwhelming rebuttal evidence. Nor can we accept the Commission view that the rebuttal testimoney is to be discounted because witnesses are under "pressure" from Texas [see App., Vol. I, 214]. A finding of pressure on witnesses before a tribunal is not one to be lightly inferred and ought not be made without evidence of some kind; none is suggested by the Commission on this score.

The court's error here was not confined merely to the questionable propriety of its disagreeing with the Commission as to the relative weight to be given various testimony and its refusal to permit the Commission to discount the reliability of some of that testimony because of the inhibition inherent in the dominant economic power Texaco has over its dealer witnesses. More fundamentally, the court misconceived the issue before the Commission. The Commission was not required to decide whether the testimony on which it relied was "representative", as the court of appeals used that term.

Under Section 5, the question for the Commission was not whether all Texaco dealers, or most Texaco dealers, felt constrained to purchase sponsored TBA. The Commission had determined, through its examination of the sales-commission method of promoting TBA, that the most significant anticompetitive effect of the practice was the foreclosure to nonsponsored brands of an opportunity to sell in the substantial market represented by dealer outlets of contracting major oil companies. In Atlantic this Court recognized "the destructive effect upon commerce that would result from the widespread use of these contracts by major oil companies and suppliers * * *" 381 U.S. at 371. Having identified a significant tandency toward the same anticompetitive effect which had been the principal basis for condemning similar sales-commission arrangements, the Commission was not obliged to await the development of the identifiable foreclosure into a "full-blown" restraint, before concluding that the Texaco-Goodrich arrangement, like is counterparts, was a violation of Section 5. See Federal Trade Commission v. Brown Shoe Co., supra, 384 U.S. at 321–322; Federal Trade Commission v. Motion Picture Adv. Co., supra, 344 U.S. at 394–395. Once again the insights of Mr. Justice Brandeis are instructive (Federal Trade Commission v. Gratz, supra, 253 U.S. at 441–442) (dissenting opinion):

> The purpose of Congress [in enacting Section 5] was to prevent any unfair method which may have been used by any concern in competition from becoming its general practice. It was only by stopping its use before it became a general practice, that the apprehended effect of an unfair method in suppressing competition by destroying rivals could be averted.

This problem is particularly acute here, because one serious anticompetitive consequence of the use of the sales-commission arrangement is that it disables smaller tire companies from competing in the service station market. The three TBA cases have disclosed that only the largest rubber companies in the United States have been able to utilize TBA sales-commission arrangements (App., Vol. VI, 87). The service station has become an increasingly important source for distribution of replacement tires, batteries, and other automobile accessories (App., Vol. VI, 87; see also Atlantic Refining, supra, 381 U.S. at 364). When each independent service station dealer remains free to choose the brands of TBA he wishes to stock, smaller producers and distributors have a greater opportunity to share in this market. When, however, a substantial number of service stations of a major oil company such as Texaco are induced to stock TBA promoted by the company under a sales commission arrangement with one of the major producers, other producers and distributors no longer have a fair chance to compete for this business. Since the original equipment market for tires is completely dominated at the present time by the five largest producers (Staff Report to the Federal Trade Commission, Economic Report on the Manufacture and Distribution of Automotive Tires, pp. 26–27 (March 1966)), it is vitally important to keep other channels of distribution open for smaller producers. The sales-commission arrangement, however, by tending to shut out the smaller competitor from substantial portions of the service station market, extends and reinforces the market power of the major TBA producers.

The sales-commission promotional plan is without redeeming economic value.[8] The plain fact is that the TBA manufacturer is willing to pay substantial commissions to the major oil company in return for the latter's use of its economic power over its dealers to gain for the TBA manufacturer a share of the market it might not be able to obtain on the competitive merits of its own product; the effect is to exclude competing TBA sellers from a significant part of the market. In these circumstances, the Commission was not obliged to show the exact degree of foreclosure which has resulted from the arrangement. It is enough that a substantial amount of commerce is involved. Atlantic Refining, supra, 381 U.S. at 371. Cf. Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. United States, supra, 356 U.S. at 7; International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment of the court of appeals should be reversed and the case should be remanded to the court of appeals with directions to enforce the Commission's order, except for paragraphs 5 and 6 directed against Texaco (see note 4, supra, p. 9).

BRIEF IN OPPOSITION FOR RESPONDENTS TEXACO INC. AND THE B. F. GOODRICH COMPANY

Opinions Below

The opinion of the Court of Appeals is reported at 383 F. 2d 942 and is printed as Appendix A of the Petition (21-40). The most recent opinion and final order of the Federal Trade Commission are not officially reported but are printed as Appendix B and Appendix C, respectively, of the Petition (41-66). The prior opinions of the Court of Appeals and of this Court are reported at 336 F.2d 754 and 381 U.S. 739. The prior opinions of the Federal Trade Commission are reported at 58 F.T.C. 1176 and 62 F.T.C. 1172 and are reproduced at JA 175 and JA 302.[1] The Initial Decision ("I.D.") and the Revised Initial Decision ("Rev. I.D.") of the Examiner are reproduced at JA 153-71 and JA 200-33, respectively.

Jurisdiction

Petitioner invokes this Court's jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §1254(1). The judgment of the Court of Appeals was entered on September 25, 1967.

Question Presented

Stripped to its essentials, the petition asks this Court to determine whether the Court of Appeals was right or wrong in its assessment of the sufficiency of the evidence in this case. Although petitioner adroitly seeks to create the impression that the court below departed from the principles which this Court enunciated in Atlantic[2] and in so doing created a conflict with the Fifth Circuit's decision in Shell,[3] the truth of the matter is that the court below, reviewing the record in this case for the second time,[4] made clear that it was conducting its review within the legal framework outlined by Atlantic and Shell. Because, in its unanimous judgment, there had been a failure of proof by petitioner on the crucial issues of exercise of economic power and competitive effects, the Court of Appeals drew a distinction between this case and the other two—as, indeed, petitioner itself had once drawn when it issued orders in Atlantic and Shell and simultaneously remanded this case for the reception of additional evidence which was never forthcoming. The real question for decision, therefore, is as follows:

> Whether the Court of Appeals, in reviewing the record in this case in light of Atlantic and Shell, made a clearly erroneous determination when it found that the record as a whole did not support petitioner's conclusion that Texaco exercised dominant economic power to cause its dealers to purchase sponsored tires, batteries and automotive accessories with resulting anticompetitive effects.

Finding that the record did not support petitioner's disposition of the merits of the controversy, it was unnecessary for the Court of Appeals to deal with the further grounds raised below by respondents which independently compel the termination of this proceeding. Those grounds relate to petitioner's abuse of the administrative process throughout this unduly protracted case in violation of the Administrative Procedure Act and of the due process requirements of the Constitution. Thus, in addition to the question presented above, respondent respectfully reserves its right to present these issues for determination should it become necessary to do so.

In the interest of clarity, it is to be noted that there was one ruling below as to which no question is presented for review. With no word of attempted justification or explanation, the Commission had included in its order against Texaco two provisions regarding coercive conduct, unrelated to the sales commission program.[5] Independently of its holding on the sales commission issue, the Court of Appeals made clear

> "* * * our view that the coercion aspect of the Commission order has no basis in law, or the record. Since we have twice determined there is no basis that Texaco overtly coerced any substantial number of dealers or that a pattern of coercion existed, the provisions of the order prohibiting such coercion were and are baseless." (App. A, p. 40, n. 16; emphasis supplied).

The petition for certiorari makes no claim of error with respect to this determination, and the Court of Appeals' decision as to it is thus final.[6]

5. Paragraphs 5 and 6 of the order (JA 231-32, SJA 165).

6. In Atlantic, paragraphs 5 and 6 of the Commission's order were also not before this Court but for precisely the opposite reason. This Court observed at the inception of the Atlantic decision:

> "Since Atlantic has not sought review of paragraphs 5 and 6 of the Commission's order as to its use of overt acts of coercion on its wholesalers and retailers those portions of the order are final" (381 U. S. at 363; SJA 60).

It was further noted:

> "* * * Atlantic has conceded the point [coercion] by not perfecting an appeal thereon" (381 U. S. at 367; SJA 64).

In Shell, the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit eliminated paragraphs 5 and 6 from the order against Shell, and no review from this ruling was sought by the Commission. The petition does not tell the whole story when it states at page 3 that the Fifth Circuit "sustained the Commission's order against" Shell and Firestone.

Statement of the Case

On January 11, 1956, the Federal Trade Commission filed three virtually verbatim complaints: one commencing this case against Texaco and Goodrich; another against the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. and The Atlantic Refining Co. (Dkt. No. 6486); and the third against The Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. and Shell Oil Co. (Dkt. No. 6487). All three cases were heard by the same Hearing Examiner and decided by him on the same day.

The facts of this case, however, were vastly different from those in the other proceedings—as the Commission itself was later to find.

The complaint challenged as an unfair method of competition an agreement between respondents whereby Goodrich paid Texaco a commission for Texaco's services in promoting the sale of Goodrich's tires, batteries and automotive accessories ("TBA") to dealers and distributors selling Texaco gasoline.

1. The Examiner's First Initial Decision Found Texaco's Sales Commission Plan Lawful.

On October 23, 1959, some three and a half years after the complaint was filed and after two years of hearings, the Examiner handed down his first Initial Decision in which he rejected the underlying theory of the complaint. Specifically, he refused to find that "[c]ompeting manufacturers and/or distributors, wholesalers or other vendors of TBA products are foreclosed from a substantial portion of the TBA business of the Texaco petroleum outlet market as a result of the override agreements between Texaco and the rubber companies" (JA 152). He also refused to find that "Texaco, by virtue of the relationship, contractual or otherwise, existing between it and station operators, consignees and distributors, handling its petroleum products, exercises control or influence over such outlets, thereby depriving them of freedom of choice as to their source of supply of TBA products and causing them to buy the TBA products of the respective rubber companies" (ibid.). Instead, he made specific findings to the contrary. In the light of these findings, the Examiner upheld the sales commission agreements. However, he issued an anti-coercion order against Texaco based on the testimony of five former Texaco dealers—a finding which the Court of Appeals later set aside, characterizing it as "extraordinary" in view of the overwhelming evidence to the contrary. 336 F.2d at 757, n. 1.

2. The First Commission Opinion Found No Basis in the Record for any Order Against Texaco.

On March 9, 1961, the Commission rendered its separate decisions in each of the three TBA cases. In both the Atlantic-Goodyear and Shell-Firestone proceedings, it found coercion, unlawful tie-ins, and adverse competitive effects resulting from the TBA sales commission agreements. In sharp contrast, in the Texaco-Goodrich case the Commission did not find coercion, tie-ins or anticompetitive effects. In the Commission's view, the legality of Texaco's sales commission contract with Goodrich turned upon its "competitive effects" (58 F.T.C. at 1178-79; JA 179). It concluded, however, that the record did not contain sufficient evidence "to enable the Commission to assess the competitive effects of the sales commission method of distributing TBA employed by these respondents" (58 F.T.C. at 1183; JA 186). Nevertheless, rather than dismissing the complaint for failure of proof, the Commission remanded the proceeding to the Examiner for the reception of additional evidence on competitive effects.

3. Texaco's Efforts to Bar the Remand Hearings

As soon as attempts were made to implement the remand order of March 9, 1961, Texaco and Goodrich brought an action against the Commission in the District Court for the District of Columbia, entitled Texaco Inc. v. FTC, Civil No. 2219-61. They contended that after at least nine years of investigation and trial, the Commission, having found the evidence insufficient to support its charges, was without authority or discretion to remand for the receipt of "further evidence" not shown to exist. An injunction was sought against further proceedings as being in excess of the Commission's authority, in derogation of the Commission's statutory duty to proceed with reasonable dispatch and in violation of the constitutional requirements of due process. In opposing this suit, counsel for the Commission represented that the Commission "needed additional evidence in order to decide the issues presented,"[7] and that the remand was not to be a retrial of what had gone before.[8] Relying on these representations, the Court denied a temporary injunction but on June 19, 1962 ruled that Texaco and Goodrich would be entitled to relief unless all further evidence was heard and the Hearing Examiner filed his decision by October 2, 1962. Subsequent attempts to obtain immediate temporary injunctive relief from the Court of Appeals and from this Court were unsuccessful. Texaco Inc. v. FTC, Appeal No. 17,111 (D. C. Cir. June 22, 1962); Texaco Inc. v. FTC (U. S. Sup. Ct. July 10, 1962; Black, J.). In each instance the tribunals were advised by Commission counsel that the remand was essential to develop needed additional evidence.

4. The Sham Remand Hearings

The remand hearings lasted 2½ days and closed on July 19, 1962 without any additional evidence having been adduced by Commission counsel. Instead of offering evidence, Commission counsel induced the Examiner to take official notice of certain matters in the Commission's opinion in the Shell-Firestone case. The Examiner brushed aside Texaco's plea that the doctrine of official notice did not permit shuffling evidence or findings from case to case, thereby cutting off the right of cross-examination and shifting the burden of proof. Subsequently, the Commission upheld Texaco on this point by eliminating from consideration anything adduced at the remand (JA 302-03), and the present Commission Order and Decision are in accord (Opinion, SJA 165; order, SJA 170, n. 3).

5. The Revised Initial Decision in Violation of the Commission's Mandate

The Examiner had been authorized only to receive "further evidence concerning the competitive effects of the respondents' practices" and to indicate what changes, if any, he wished to make in his first Initial Decision in light of such evidence (58 F.T.C. at 1183; JA 174). Nevertheless, on September 24, 1962, without any additional evidence from Commission counsel, he filed a revised Initial Decision in which he added new findings and substituted new and contrary conclusions for those he had formerly reached. Now holding that the use of the sales commission method of distributing TBA violated Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Examiner issued a revised order which duplicated that entered by the Commission in the other two TBA cases.

6. The Second Commission Opinion

The "second round" appeal was orally argued before the Commission on April 4, 1963. Eleven days later, on April 15, 1963, the Commission handed down a 3-1 per curiam decision holding precisely the opposite of what it had held on March 9, 1961. Looking only to the pre-remand record, it sustained the Examiner's freshly minted conclusion that the sales commission agreements were unlawful. Without reviewing any evidence in its three paragraph opinion, the Commission ruled that the old record "amply supports the conclusions and the order of the hearing examiner" (JA 302). No basis for its reversal of position was set forth. As legal authority, the Commission merely cited its two other TBA decisions which it had handed down on the very day when it had earlier found the record in this case insufficient and had directed a remand.[9]

9. Commissioner MacIntyre did not participate. Commissioner Anderson, who was the only member of the Commission who had participated in its earlier decision, did not concur "for the reason that the command of the remand order of March 9, 1961 had not been met and complied with" (JA 303).

Before this second appeal to the Commission, the participation of Chairman Dixon, one of the members of the Commission majority, had been unsuccessfully challenged by Texaco. Prior to the remand hearings before the Examiner, Chairman Dixon, in a speech made on July 25, 1961, had publicly denounced the practices attacked by the complaint as illegal and had specifically named Texaco and Goodrich in this connection.

7. The First Decision of the Court of Appeals

On the appeal from the Commission's 1963 Decision, the Court of Appeals was unanimous in its judgment that "Chairman Dixon's participation in the hearing amounted in the circumstances to a denial of due process which invalidated the order under review," and held that the motion for his disqualification should have been granted (336 F.2d at 760, SJA 10-11).

With respect to the merits, a majority further held that there had been a failure of proof. It first ruled that coercion had not been proved (336 F.2d at 763; SJA 17), specifically finding that the record "demonstrates the contrary" of "coercive tactics" (336 F.2d at 762; SJA 15). Not only is it Texaco's policy "to respect the independence of its dealers," declared the Court, but such policy was followed in actual practice (ibid.).

Second, noting that under the Commission's view of the law an essential element of a Section 5 violation was Texaco's possession and exercise of controlling economic power over its dealers, the Court ruled that there was no substantial evidentiary basis for any such finding (336 F.2d at 762; SJA 14).

Third, it inferentially ruled that no anticompetitive effects had been shown when it found that Texaco dealers "are quite free to accept or reject" Texaco's "recommendation" concerning TBA (336 F.2d at 763; SJA 16).

Finally, the Court held that the Commission's

> "* * * efforts in this case—fruitless after a dozen years—have exceeded permissible limits and have had unreasonably harassing and oppressive effects upon the companies under attack" (ibid.).

The Court concluded:

> "Because the Commission's drastic orders are not supported by the record as a whole and because of the undue protraction of the administrative process, we are of the opinion that this long drawn out proceeding should now be terminated" (ibid.).

8. Atlantic Case Taken to This Court

In making its determination concerning the absence of both coercion and the exercise of controlling economic power, the Court of Appeals was well aware of the Seventh Circuit's ruling on different facts in Atlantic-Goodyear,[10] which had been decided a few month earlier.

The record before the Seventh Circuit in the Atlantic case had literally seethed with evidence of Atlantic's coercive practices vis-a-vis its dealers. In this context of overwhelming proof that Atlantic's dealers were being forced by Atlantic to act contrary to their wishes, the Seventh Circuit characterized them as "economic serfs" and affirmed the Commission's order.

In seeking review before this Court, Atlantic conceded that it had coerced its dealers and did not challenge the anti-coercion order. What Atlantic contested was the prohibition against the sales commission plan itself, arguing that such additional relief was unnecessary.

9. This Court's Atlantic Decision

Finding that Atlantic had successfully "marshaled its full economic power in a continuing campaign to force its dealers and wholesalers to buy Goodyear products" with a concomitant detrimental impact on competition (381 U.S. at 371; SJA 68; emphasis supplied), this Court sustained the order prohibiting Atlantic from being a party to TBA sales commission agreements. The Court held that such a prohibition was warranted because of the "long existence of the plan itself, coupled with the coercive acts practiced by Atlantic pursuant to it." (381 U. S. at 372; SJA 70; emphasis supplied).

10. This Court's Disposition of This Case

While Atlantic's petition for certiorari was pending before this Court, the Government petitioned for certiorari in this case. It did not seek review of the dismissal of the anti-coercion order or of the decision disqualifying Chairman Dixon. Six days after announcing its decision in At- lantic, on June 7, 1965, the Court granted the writ, and without passing upon the merits, directed that the judgment of the Court of Appeals be vacated and that the case be remanded to the Commission for further proceedings "in light of Atlantic Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 381 U. S. 357 (1965)." 381 U. S. 739, 740 (1965); SJA 89.

11. Proceedings Before the Commission After Remand

On remand from this Court, the Commission (Commissioners Dixon and MacIntyre not participating) rendered an opinion dated January 14, 1966 and issued an order identical to the one it had issued in Atlantic.

Although the purpose of the remand was to determine "whether the facts of record in the present case" bring it within the Atlantic rule, the Commission's Opinion eschewed factual analysis. Instead, it proceeded on the newly adopted legal premise that it is inherently unlawful for a "major" oil company to enter into a TBA sales commission arrangement with a "major" rubber company. Under this rule of per se illegality, the factual distinctions between Atlantic and the present case were deemed beside the point. To the Commission, it made no difference that Atlantic's dealers were forced against their will to purchase sponsored TBA and Texaco's dealers were not. The opinion explicitly disclaimed reliance upon any finding of coercion to support the Order (Opinion, SJA 172, n. 6).

12. The Fifth Circuit's Decision in Shell

By the time this case reached the Court of Appeals again on petitions to review filed by Texaco and Goodrich, the Fifth Circuit had decided Shell-Firestone.[11] In that case, Judge Wisdom rejected the Commission's contention that Atlantic had held that all sales commission agreements between major oil and rubber companies were unlawful per se, stating: "Courts must look to the record, at least to the extent the Supreme Court relied on the record in Atlantic" (360 F.2d at 479). According to Judge Wisdom:

11. Shell Oil Co. v. FTC, 360 F.2d 470 (5th Cir. 1966).

> "The rationale for the Atlantic decision may be broken down into three essential components, each of which depends on the facts of the case before the court:
> (1) the oil company's dominant economic power over its dealers;
>
> (2) the exercise of that power over its dealers;
> (3) the anti-competitive effects of using that power" (id. at 477).

"[O]n the facts of the case before the Court," the Fifth Circuit held that the Shell-Firestone sales commission agreement had violated Section 5: "* * * the controlling facts in this case are so similar to those in Atlantic that the same result should be reached in both cases" (id. at 475).

13. The Second Decision of the Court of Appeals

When this case returned for a second time to the Court of Appeals, that Court addressed itself to the question

> "whether the Commission has complied with the remand order and correctly applied the applicable principles enunciated in the Atlantic holding" (App. A, p. 27).

Its unanimous conclusion, after a second full review of the record and with the benefit of the Fifth Circuit's Shell decision before it, was that the Commission had not.

Declaring itself in agreement with Judge Wisdom's view of Atlantic (App. A, p. 27), the court below scrutinized the record in this case in terms of the three essential components of the Atlantic rationale.

a. Existence of Dominant Economic Power

As to the first component—the "existence of dominant economic power"—the Court of Appeals revised its prior finding in light of Atlantic and, quoting from Judge Wisdom in Shell, held that such power was " 'inherent in the structure and economics of the petroleum distribution system' " (App. A, p. 29).

b. Exercise of Dominant Economic Power

But on the critical question of whether Texaco had exercised dominant economic power—the second essential element under Atlantic—the Court of Appeals adhered to its earlier determination that Texaco had not exploited its power to cause its dealers to purchase sponsored TBA.

At the outset, the Court noted that Texaco, unlike Atlantic, had not engaged in coercion. For this reason the Court of Appeals made clear that, wholly apart from the legality of Texaco's sales commission plan, there was no basis in law or fact for the anti-coercion provisions of the Commission's order (App. A, p. 40, n. 16)—a ruling on which petitioner does not seek review by this Court.

With respect to the legality of the plan itself, the court below advanced two distinct theories to support its conclusion that there had been no exercise of dominant economic power.

First, it noted that in Atlantic "coercion was found to have permeated the entire Atlantic program, contaminating even its neutral conduct" (App. A., p. 30). The Court of Appeals accordingly viewed "a finding of coercion [as] the threshold requirement of a determination of exercise of dominant economic power" (ibid.).

But the court below did not rest its decision on the absence of coercion. As an independent ground for its decision it found that Texaco had not even exercised dominant economic power over its dealers in a non-coercive way:

> "Of course we realize, as did Judge Wisdom in Shell, that the 'Company's use of its economic power through the sales commission plan to cause its dealers to buy sponsored TBA even in the absence of overt coercion' can constitute an unfair method of competition and a violation of section 5, Shell at 482-83 [emphasis added]" (App. A, p. 31).

The Court then proceeded to meet head-on petitioner's argument that each of the "non-coercive practices" referred to in Atlantic are present in equal degree in this case (ibid.).

First, the Court emphasized the Examiner's finding that "Texaco dealers, unlike those of Atlantic and Shell, were free to accept or reject sponsored products" (id. at 32). Amplifying this critical distinction, the Court contrasted Atlantic's sales practices with Texaco's, noting that whereas Atlantic had put pressure on its dealers to "vigorously" represent and cooperate with Goodyear, Texaco had followed a policy of permitting "each dealer to choose whatever brand TBA he desires" (ibid.).[12]

The Court cited other examples of fundamental differences in the two oil companies' sales commission programs: Atlantic's regular policy of "double teaming" and advance solicitation—which with Texaco were "isolated and sporadic" occurrences; Atlantic's TBA dealer quota and policing system—having no Texaco counterpart; Atlantic's restrictive credit card policy—as distinguished from Texaco's practice of permitting its dealers to charge non-sponsored TBA; and Atlantic's assignment of its dealers to a single Goodyear TBA supply point—while Texaco dealers were assigned to nobody, evidencing their freedom to deal with any supplier of their choice (id. at 34).

Summing up on this issue, the Court declared:

> "These few examples demonstrate a different set of facts between the Atlantic record and this case" (ibid.).

12. The significance of the different nature of the sales practices of the two companies is perhaps best demonstrated by the relative "effectiveness" of their programs. An Atlantic survey between 1946 and 1949 showed that 67% of its dealers preferred another brand of tires and 76% another brand of batteries. Yet in 1951, "[w]ithin seven months after the agreement Goodyear had signed up 96% and 98%, respectively, of Atlantic's dealers in two of the three areas assigned to it" (381 U. S. at 366; SJA 63). Two months later "an Atlantic report showed that virtually all Atlantic dealers in Goodyear's assigned territory who were potential purchasers of TBA had signed contracts agreeing to handle Goodyear products" (58 F.T.C. at 346).

In diametrical opposition, although Texaco's program had been in effect for well over a decade before Atlantic's was even commenced, the overwhelming number of Texaco dealers still did not regularly purchase any sponsored TBA: approximately two-thirds did not buy sponsored tires, and 80% did not buy sponsored batteries and acces-

The court accordingly concluded that Texaco had not "exploited its service station market illegally for the benefit of itself and Goodrich" (ibid.).

c. Anticompetitive Effects

With respect to the third requirement—a showing of anticompetitive effects—the Court of Appeals approached the problem from the point of view of both interbrand and intrabrand competition. Once again the records in the two cases were entirely different. In Atlantic, interbrand competition had been snuffed out by reason of "a classic division of territories between Goodyear and Firestone," from which it followed that "Atlantic dealers could only buy at the prices designated by supplier to whom the territory had been allocated" (id. at 37). The Texaco-Goodrich record, per contra, "is devoid of evidence disclosing any form of territorial division" or "price dictation" (ibid.). As for the Commission's reliance on certain testimony that non-sponsored TBA suppliers had difficulty selling to Texaco dealers because the latter felt that they were required to buy the sponsored product, the Court for the second time rejected such evidence as atypical "isolated instances which were generally contradicted by overwhelming rebuttal evidence" (id. at 38).

With respect to intrabrand competition, whereas Atlantic's supply point system had the inevitable effect of precluding such competition, since Texaco had no such system, there was no parallel anti-competitive effect.

In the face of "the long standing Texaco policy that Texaco dealers are free to purchase any brand of TBA which they desire to sell" (id. at 37), the fact that Texaco dealers purchased substantial quantities of sponsored TBA did not constitute proof of the requisite adverse effect on competition.

In sum, the Court concluded that "while the record shows Texaco indeed has dominant economic power, it is fatally deficient on the crucial issues of exercise of that power and subsequent anticompetitive effects" (id. at 39-40). For this reason the Court rejected the Commission's position that it would be unfair to prevent Atlantic and Shell, but not Texaco, from using the sales commission plan:

> "We agree that it would be inequitable, and indeed a dereliction of the Commission's obligations, provided that all three were guilty of substantially equal violations of section 5. But simply because Texaco is in the same line of business does not mean it must suffer the pain of the misdeeds of other oil companies; this would indeed be guilt by association. We conclude that the record simply does not support a finding that Texaco violated the Act (id. at 39).

Confronted with the failure of proof in this case, the Court of Appeals recognized that

> "One course available to us would be to remand this case once again to the Commission to permit it to develop additional evidence for the record but the Commission and Examiner have had abundant opportunity —and direct mandate—to do this in the past and have not done so. We think the time has now come to termi> nate these protracted proceedings and dismiss the complaint. * * * the Commission has now had more than an adequate opportunity to develop a record in support of its section 5 contentions over a period of fourteen years'' (id. at 40; emphasis supplied).

Accordingly, it directed that the complaint be dismissed.

ARGUMENT

This Case Does Not Warrant Review.

There is no new question of law for the Court to decide in this case. The Court laid down the applicable legal principles in Atlantic and ordered that the facts of record here be evaluated in terms of those established principles. That has been done by the Court of Appeals. In doing so, it expressed its agreement with the Fifth Circuit's understanding of the Atlantic rationale. Hence there is no conflict among circuits. The only questions which could be reviewed here are questions of facts—a function which this Court should not be asked to perform—particularly in the circumstances of this case where the Commission has had its record reviewed not once, but twice, by the Court of Appeals. The very reasons which prompted then Solicitor General Marshall to oppose the petition for certiorari in the Shell-Firestone case militate against the grant of certiorari here.

In his Brief in Opposition in Shell-Firestone, the Solicitor General pointed out that the Fifth Circuit had held that Shell, although it had not overtly coerced its dealers to handle Firestone TBA, had nevertheless exploited its economic dominance over its dealers to cause them to purchase the sponsored products with demonstrable anticompetitive effects, and that this exercise of power rendered the Shell plan an unfair method of competition. This holding, the Solicitor General contended, simply involved an application of the record facts to the standards articulated in Atlantic, and as such did not warrant Supreme Court review. In response to Firestone's request that the court decide "'whether there is substantial evidence to support the Commission's specific findings of fact' that Shell had economic power over its dealers, which it used to cause them to purchase substantial quantities of sponsored TBA," the Solicitor General stated:

> "The court of appeals fully reviewed the record on that issue, however, and upheld the Commission's findings as adequately supported, and there is no occasion for a second review of that factual issue." (Brief in Opposition, p. 15).

Surely the mere fact that the Court of Appeals, guided by the same legal criteria as the Fifth Circuit but reviewing a markedly different record, concluded that the Commission's findings were not supported by substantial evidence, does not make this case any more appropriate for Supreme Court review. The fact that the Court of Appeals came to that conclusion for the second time—after having the benefit of both this Court's Atlantic and the Fifth Circuit's Shell opinions—underscores that now at long last is the time to call a halt to this marathon litigation.

Petitioner argues that the court below misconceived the true import of Atlantic because it stated that "a finding of coercion is the threshold requirement of a determination of the exercise of dominant economic power" (Petition, p. 13).

This statement, respondents submit, is a correct reading of Atlantic, which rests on this Court's finding that Atlantic had successfully "marshaled its full economic power in a continuing campaign to force its dealers and wholesalers to buy Goodyear products" (381 U.S. at 371; emphasis added).

But it makes no difference whether coercion is a sine qua non to illegality under Atlantic because the court below rested its decision on an independently self-sufficient ground, namely, that Texaco did not exercise its economic power over its dealers even without coercion to cause them to handle sponsored TBA. The Court of Appeals explicitly stated: "Of course, we realize, as did Judge Wisdom in Shell, that the 'Company's use of its economic power through the sales commission plan to cause its dealers to buy sponsored TBA even in the absence of overt coercion' can constitute an unfair method of competition and a violation of section 5, Shell at 482-83 (emphasis added)." (App. A, p. 31). The Court then reviewed the record to show that Texaco did not engage in the non-coercive practices referred to in Atlantic and that Texaco dealers were entirely free to accept or reject sponsored products (see pp. 16-17, supra), a freedom which they exercised predominantly against the sponsored brands (see p. 17, supra, n. 12).

By the same token, the record in this case is markedly different from that in Shell. And the difference is basic to the question of legality.

A few of the differences between Shell's practices and Texaco's will demonstrate why the decisions of the Fifth and District of Columbia Circuits are consistent as a matter of fact (as well as law).

1. "Shell promptly notifies Firestone (or Goodyear) and its local supply point of new Shell dealers. This permits Firestone to sign up the new dealer, and obtain his initial order, before competing TBA companies even learn his identity" (Government's Brief in Opposition, p. 8). Here, on the other hand, as the Court of Appeals pointed out: "the Commission itself * * * struck the Examiner's finding that Texaco 'salesmen were encouraged by [Texaco] management to write up orders for sponsored TBA without waiting for a formal request from a dealer' " (App. A, p. 33). And Texaco engaged in advance solicitation only on isolated occasions (ibid.).

2. "Once the new [Shell] dealer has made his selection, Firestone and Goodyear defer to the choice and no longer compete with each other for the station's business" (Government's Brief in Opposition, p. 8). Here, there was no division of Texaco dealer accounts by the rubber companies (id. at 37).

3. Under the Shell plan, "the chosen [rubber] company assigns the service station to a specific supply point and Shell urges the dealer to purchase all TBA from that assigned outlet. No sales commissions are paid to Shell on TBA purchases from non-designated supply points, even though the brand acquired may be the same" (Government's Brief in Opposition, p. 8). Here, there was no assignment of specific supply points. "[E]ach [Texaco] dealer did not buy exclusively from, and was not limited to, any particular supply point but was free to deal with any source he chose" (App. A, p. 34).

4. "Much of the promotional work directed towards the [Shell] dealers is performed by Firestone and Shell salesmen under a system of joint solicitation called 'double teaming'. The companies acknowledged that this system, used throughout a dealer's term to encourage purchases of sponsored TBA and to discourage excessive merchandising of competing brands, is their most effective promotional device" (Government's Brief in Opposition, p. 9; emphasis supplied). Here, "double teaming" was found to be an "isolated and sporadic" practice (App. A, p. 33).

5. "If Firestone salesmen encounter any resistance, their company will send a list of the recalcitrant dealers to Shell," and "Shell offers the services of its district salesmen to overcome pockets of dealer resistance" (Government's Brief in Opposition, p. 10). Here, there was no such policing of dealers. As the Court of Appeals noted: "In the original appeal to this Court, the Commission contended that the quota and policing system were also used by Texaco. In the present appeal the Commission has retreated from this position" (App. A, p. 34).

There is such a thing in litigation as a failure of proof. That is precisely what occurred here. The facts of record in this case simply cannot be forced into the Atlantic or Shell molds. And this Court should not be asked to force them. There is nothing in the nature of things that impels the conclusion that the Court of Appeals was wrong when it found that "Texaco dealers, unlike those of Atlantic and Shell, were free to accept or reject sponsored products" (App. A, p. 32). While the petition implies disagreement with that salient finding (p. 17), this is hardly the type of question which this Court should be called upon to review. Indeed, petitioner recognizes as much, since it argues that the issue of dealer freedom is beside the point: "* * * the court's conclusion that Texaco dealers were 'free' to chose nonsponsored TBA * * * is in any event irrelevant * * *" (ibid.).

This is a far cry from the position that the then Solicitor General took the last time that this Court was urged to grant certiorari in this case. Then he contended:

> "The basic vice of the plan is that it amounts to an illegal tying arrangement under which Texaco requires its dealers, as a condition of maintaining that status, to purchase Goodrich and Firestone TBA" (1964 Petition, p. 15; emphasis added).

Underscoring his point that the test was whether Texaco had obliged its dealers to make purchases contrary to their will, the Solicitor General told this Court in 1964:

> "The sales commission agreements with Goodrich and Firestone were responsible for Texaco's exercise of its power to compel its dealers to buy those companies' TBA" (id. at 18; emphasis added).

The Solicitor General was not using words carelessly in 1964. He took precisely the same position on oral argument before this Court in Atlantic, when he specifically disclaimed any contention that the sales commission arrangement was inherently unlawful. Thus the Court was advised:

> "* * * if you had just the contract standing alone, you could not say on its face that this is bad, it depends on what they would do about it." (Transcript of Oral Argument Before Supreme Court, Atlantic Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, p. 72.)

In this connection Justice Brennan observed:

"* * * there is no contention of the Government that the sales commission contract in and of itself ran afoul of such a provision [Section 5], it is only the performance under the contract, the method of operation." (id. at 80).

The Solicitor General agreed with Justice Brennan that:

"* * * the Government does not suggest that there may not be commission sales arrangements which would satisfy Section 5." (id. at 80).

The Solicitor General informed the Court that he was not contending that economic power alone was sufficient to invalidate the plan. In other words, he declined to advocate the Seventh Circuit's notion that "recommendation is tantamount to command."

"Justice White: * * * That is the real nub of your argument, I gather, that companies can't recommend and at the same time have this power.

"Mr. Friedman: They can't recommend it in the way in which they recommend it here. I think again it is a matter of degree basically" (id. at 81) (emphasis supplied).

The Solicitor General made it clear that he was not asking the Court to predicate illegality upon the fact that there was a disparity of economic power between Atlantic and any of its dealers but rather upon the improper exercise of such power—not upon the mere existence of Atlantic's leases but rather upon the improper use to which Atlantic put them. Thus counsel stated:

> "* * * in this case we have the power and its use" (id. at 52).
>
> "[T]he basis on which the Commission's decision holding the Atlantic contract to be invalid rests is the power that Atlantic has, and the fact that in these circumstances the power is brought to bear" (id. at 82) (emphasis supplied).

In speaking of the exercise of power, the Solicitor General emphasized that he was referring not to salesmanship but to pressure and coercion:

> "* * * in this case we have the power and its use. I don't think I have to take on the more difficult case, if we didn't have the actual use of the power.
>
> "Justice Brennan: The power and the use with pressure, not power and the use meaning coercion?
> "Mr. Friedman: Power and use meaning pressure, with some coercion" (id. at 52) (emphasis supplied).

Upon further questioning, counsel reaffirmed the importance of Atlantic's use of its power:

> "Justice White: And he [the Atlantic dealer] is coerced?
>
> "Mr. Friedman: He is coerced, he is coerced in fact" (id. at 56).
>
>
> "Justice Stewart: The pressure put upon them?
>
> "Mr. Friedman: Coercive pressure, threats of lease cancellation" (id. at 58).
>
>
> "Justice Stewart: They were under coercion?
> "Mr. Friedman: They were under coercion" (ibid.).

The Solicitor General stressed that it was the totality of Atlantic's improper conduct which caused the proven anti-competitive effects:

> "If I may, I would like to show what they actually did in this case, and then to suggest why there may very well be situations where eliminating some of the things they did in this case would not have the same adverse effect on the competition as the plan the Commission condemned" (id. at 48-49) (emphasis supplied).

Far from being "irrelevant," the conclusion of the Court of Appeals in this case that "Texaco dealers were 'free' to choose non-sponsored TBA" is dispositive. Dealer freedom is the very antithesis of exercise of economic power in one market to subvert competition in another. Such freedom negates anticompetitive foreclosure, which presupposes the exercise of power to prevent competitors from gaining access to a market. Since Texaco dealers were entirely free to select their own TBA suppliers, it is a contradiction in terms to say that there was foreclosure.

Lest we be misunderstood, we are not claiming that there must be total foreclosure of all Texaco dealers in order to establish a Section 5 violation. Our point is that there was no foreclosure at all in this case. All Texaco dealers were free to buy from TBA suppliers of their own choosing. To the extent that they elected to buy sponsored TBA—and it was a minor extent—their choice cannot be ascribed to an exercise of Texaco's economic power. After all, these sponsored products were among the leading brands of TBA; they were highly advertised; they had great consumer acceptance. Hence, the fact that they were purchased in substantial quantities by certain Texaco dealers cannot convert their free election to do so into a wrongful exercise of economic power by Texaco.

Petitioner suggests that it is discriminatory to prevent Atlantic and Shell from using sales commission agreements if Texaco is free to do so (Petition, p. 11). The shoe is on the other foot. It is discriminatory to outlaw Texaco's use of the sales commission plan just because Atlantic and Shell have abused the privilege. The fact that all three are characterized as "major" oil companies hardly makes the question of individual "innocence" or "guilt" any less personal. That is why separate hearings were held in the three TBA cases, that is why the Commission ruled that evidence received in one proceeding could not be considered in another, and that presumably is why the Commission has not proceeded against other "major" oil and rubber companies which have sales commission agreements.

When all is said and done, petitioner cannot prevail in this case unless it is unlawful per se for Texaco and Goodrich to be parties to a sales commission agreement. This is not the rule that the Solicitor General sought in Atlantic. Nor is it the rule that this Court handed down. Both the Fifth Circuit and the court below are in total agreement on this point. Manifestly, there would have been no reason for this Court to have ordered a remand here for consideration of the record in light of the principles announced in Atlantic if Atlantic laid down a rule of per se illegality.

The Court of Appeals, unlike the Commission, did exactly what this Court directed it to do: it applied the principles of Atlantic to the facts of record.

Conclusion

The decision of the Court of Appeals in this case, involving as it does an application of the facts to law already settled by this Court, presents no new issue of general public importance. Nor does it conflict in legal principle or approach with any decision of another Court of Appeals. No question can properly be presented here other than one of fact. Review of the facts is the responsibility of the Court of Appeals, which has now discharged its obligation for the second time in this matter. This is a classic example of the type of case with which this Court should not be burdened.

v.

TEXACO, INC., AND THE B. F. GOODRICH COMPANY

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT

The Solicitor General, on behalf of the Federal Trade Commission, petitions for a writ of certiorari to review the judgment of the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit entered in the above case on September 25, 1967.

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the court of appeals (App. A, infra) is reported at 383 F. 2d 942. The opinion (App. B, infra) and final order (App. C, infra) of the Federal Trade Commission are not officially reported. The prior opinions of the court of appeals and of this Court are reported at 336 F. 2d 754 and 381 U.S. 739. The prior opinions of the Federal Trade Commission are reported at 58 F.T.C. 1176 and 62 F.T.C. 1172 and are reproduced at JA 175 and JA 302.[1] The initial decision of the Hearing Examiner and his initial decision after remand from the Commission are reproduced at JA 153 and JA 200, respectively.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the court of appeals (App. D, infra) was entered on September 25, 1967. On December 14, 1967, Mr. Chief Justice Warren extended the time for filing a petition for writ of certiorari to and including January 25, 1968. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. 1254(1).

QUESTION PRESENTED

Whether, under the standards set forth in Atlantic Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 381 U.S. 357, the Federal Trade Commission was warranted in concluding that it is an unfair method of competition in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act for a major oil company, which has dominant economic power over its dealers, and a major rubber company, to enter into an agreement whereby the oil company promotes and takes steps to induce its dealers to purchase the rubber company's tires, batteries and automotive accessories, in return for a commission on all such sales.

[1] JA refers to the printed Joint Appendix, JAX refers to the exhibit volumes of the Joint Appendix, and SJA refers to the Supplemental Joint Appendix, filed in the court of appeals.

STATUTE INVOLVED

Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. 45, provides, in pertinent part:

> Unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce, are declared unlawful. * * * The Commission is empowered and directed to prevent persons, partnerships, or corporations * * * from using unfair methods of competition in commerce and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce.

STATEMENT

This is one of three contemporaneous but separate proceedings in which the Federal Trade Commission held that a sales commission arrangement between a major oil company and a leading producer of tires, batteries and automotive accessories ("TBA") for the distribution of TBA through the retail gasoline service stations of the oil company was an unfair method of competition in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. In Atlantic Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 381 U.S. 357, this Court sustained the Commission's order against the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company and the Atlantic Refining Company. In Shell Oil Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 360 F. 2d 470, certiorari denied, 385 U.S. 1002, the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, subsequent to this Court's decision in Atlantic, sustained the Commission's order against the Shell Oil Company and The Firestone Tire & Rubber Company. In both of these cases the oil and tire companies were enjoined from participating in any such sales commission arrangements with any other company.

The present case involves the validity of sales commission agreements that the respondent Texaco, Inc. ("Texaco") has entered into with respondent B. F. Goodrich Co. ("Goodrich") and with the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company ("Firestone"),[2] two major rubber companies, under which Texaco undertook to promote the sale of Goodrich and Firestone TBA to its dealers, and the latter companies agreed to pay Texaco a commission upon their sales of TBA to such dealers. The Commission held that these arrangements for the distribution of TBA were unfair methods of competition and unfair acts and practices in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, and entered a cease-and-desist order. The Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit set aside the Commission's order and instructed the agency to dismiss the complaint.

A. THE TEXACO-GOODRICH ARRANGEMENT

Texaco, whose 1954 sales were more than one and one-half billion dollars (JA 181), is one of the Nation's largest petroleum companies. It sells its petroleum products to approximately 30,000 service stations (JA 221, SJA 182). Some of these dealers lease their stations directly from Texaco, usually initially for one year, renewable thereafter on a year-to-year basis, and terminable upon ten days notice by either party. Each lease contains general housekeeping requirements concerning the station's use, maintenance and general appearance which, if breached, can result in immediate cancellation by Texaco without notice to the lessee (JA 206–207, 226, SJA 182–183). Other dealers ("contract dealers") either own their own stations or lease them from third parties. These dealers lease pumps and other facilities from Texaco. Both categories of dealers enter into a gasoline "Agreement of Sale," prescribing annual minimum and maximum purchases at current Texaco prices. This agreement generally also runs from year-to-year and is terminable upon thirty days notice; it is automatically cancelled if the lease of a dealer is terminated (JA 204, SJA 182).

[2] Firestone has since become subject to a final order of the Commission prohibiting its use of a sales commission plan with any oil company. See Shell Oil Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 360 F. 2d 470, 474 (C.A. 5), certiorari denied, 385 U.S. 1002.

Goodrich, one of the four largest rubber companies in the United States, manufactures a full line of tires, tubes, and related products. In addition, it purchases for resale batteries labeled BFG, and a full line of automotive accessories which are sold under the manufacturers' nationally advertised brand names (JA 179–180, 217). In 1954, it distributed these products through almost 500 company-owned stores and through many independent dealers throughout the United States. Its net sales in that year exceeded one-half billion dollars (JA 180–182, 217–218).

The Texaco-Goodrich agreement provides that Goodrich will pay Texaco a commission on all purchases of Goodrich TBA by Texaco consignees, dealers or distributors in "consideration of the aid to be given and the services to be rendered by [Texaco's] sales organization in connection with promoting the sale of Goodrich products" (JAX 8). In performing this agreement Texaco has carried out the following promotional activities, among others: (a) when interviewing prospective dealers, Texaco emphasized the importance of TBA and recommended sponsored products (J.A. 216, S.J.A. 183); (b) all of Texaco's sales campaign materials and literature discussing the importance of TBA utilized and recommended sponsored products (J.A. 208, 345–346, 361–362, S.J.A. 184); (c) sponsored companies were notified of new dealers and stations before they began operation, thus enabling the sponsored companies to sign them up before competitors were even aware of their existence (J.A. 399–400, 511, 723, S.J.A. 183–184); (d) Texaco salesmen continually promoted sponsored TBA in their day-to-day contacts with the dealers (J.A. 330, 412, 526–527, S.J.A. 184); (e) Texaco and tire company salesmen called on dealers together (J.A. 539, 680, S.J.A. 184); and (f) Texaco used sales figures on sponsored TBA in evaluating the economic performance of its service stations (J.A. 316–317, 505, 719–720, S.J.A. 185).

In 1955, Texaco's 30,000 service stations constituted approximately 16.5 percent of the country's total of more than 180,000 stations. The dollar volume of sponsored TBA sold to Texaco dealers by Goodrich and Firestone in the period 1952–1956 was $245 million; in 1956 alone it was almost $60 million (JA 209, SJA 182). Texaco received a commission of 10 percent on sales of sponsored TBA to Texaco retail dealers and of 7½ percent on sales to its wholesale distributors (JA 207). The total TBA commissions received by Texaco in the period 1952–1956 were almost $22 million (JA 210).

B. PRIOR JUDICIAL REVIEW OF THE COMMISSION'S ORDER

The Commission's first order to cease and desist was issued on April 15, 1963 (62 F.T.C. 1197).[3] Upon judicial review, the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit set aside that order (336 F. 2d 754). The court held (1) that Chairman Dixon was disqualified from participating in the proceeding because of statements he had made about the case to a petroleum retailers' meeting, and (2) that the sales commission plan was not illegal because there was no proof that Texaco had sufficient economic power over its dealers to force them to buy sponsored TBA products or had engaged in overt coercive practices. The Commission filed a petition for a writ of certiorari to [3] Previously, on March 9, 1961, the Commission had remanded the case to the hearing examiner for the taking of additional evidence on the competitive effects of the sales commission plan (58 F.T.C. 1176). After unsuccessful efforts in the district court, the court of appeals and this Court by Texaco and Goodrich to enjoin further proceedings, the hearing examiner held a hearing and issued a revised opinion. On appeal, the Commission concluded that the additional evidence which had been adduced on remand and which the respondents had challenged as incompetent or immaterial was unnecessary for its decision and held the sales commission plans illegal on the same basis as in the Atlantic and Shell cases (62 F.T.C. 1172). After the court of appeals set aside the Commission's order (336 F. 2d 754), this Court remanded the case to the Commission for further consideration in light of Atlantic (381 U.S. 357). Thus, the question of the examiner's compliance with the Commission's remand order and the admissibility of the evidence adduced on remand is no longer relevant, for the Commission has not relied on it.

review the second part of the decision, but did not challenge the ruling on Chairman Dixon's disqualification. Petition for a writ of certiorari, No. 635, October Term, 1964.

While the Texaco petition was pending, this Court granted certiorari in the companion Atlantic Refining case, and there upheld the Commission's order directed against the Atlantic-Goodyear sales commission plan. One week after its decision there, the Court granted the Texaco petition, vacated the judgment of the court of appeals and remanded the case to the Commission for further consideration in light of Atlantic. Federal Trade Commission v. Texaco, Inc., 381 U.S. 739.

C. PROCEEDINGS FOLLOWING REMAND

Pursuant to this Court's remand order, the Commission reconsidered the record in this case and issued a new opinion holding the sales commission plan to be an unfair method of competition.

The essence of the Atlantic decision, according to the Commission, was that "while coercive practices aggravate the restraint imposed by the sales commission plan, it is the oil company's power over its dealers, derived from the contractual relationship between them, and the utilization of that power through the performance of the promotional services required by the sales commission agreement, which renders the sales commission plan unlawful" (App. B, infra, p. 50). In reviewing the record, the Commission ruled that the economic dependence of Texaco dealers is the same as that of Atlantic dealers (App. B, infra, p. 58), and that the oil company need not engage in overtly coercive tactics in order effectively to exercise its dominant economic power over its dealers. The Commission stated that the various promotional activities engaged in by Texaco inevitably "impress upon Texaco dealers, through constant repetition and in a variety of ways, that Texaco, whose favor the dealer must court, has a strong interest in their purchase of the sponsored TBA products (App. B, infra, pp. 58–59).

On the issue of anticompetitive effect, the Commission held that no extensive economic analysis was required, since the amount of commerce involved was substantially greater than that in the Atlantic case. It pointed to evidence that competing sellers of TBA had been foreclosed from the Texaco service station market, i.e., testimony by former Texaco dealers and competing TBA suppliers that the Texaco dealers did not feel that they were free to buy from non-sponsored suppliers (App. B, infra, pp. 57–58, 60).

The Commission's order enjoined both Texaco and Goodrich from entering into a TBA sales commission contract with any other company. In this respect, the order was identical in scope to that approved by this Court in Atlantic.

The Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit again set aside the order, and instructed the agency to dismiss the complaint. The court read this Court's Atlantic decision as establishing "three essential components" for a sales commission agreement to be illegal:

> "(a) the oil company's dominant economic power over its dealers;
> (b) exercise of that power over its dealers;

(e) anticompetitive effects of using that power." (App. A, infra, p. 27).

The court conceded that the Commission satisfactorily established the first of these elements in the instant case. As to the second, the court held: "We can glean nothing from the utterances of the Supreme Court which alters the basic rule that a finding of coercion is the threshold requirement of a determination of exercise of dominent economic power" (App. A, infra, p. 30). Since the court did not consider the promotional activities described by the Commission as coercive, it concluded: "We do not find that Texaco used its controlling economic power to compel its dealers to purchase sponsored TBA" (App. A, infra, p. 34). As to the third element, the court held that "there is an absence of substantial evidence which supports a finding of anticompetitive effects" (App. A, infra, p. 39). The court relied in substantial part upon its view that the hearing examiner had found that Texaco dealers were free to choose whatever TBA they wanted—a finding it concluded was supported by the weight of the testimony.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

In reversing the Commission's holding that the Texaco-Goodrich sales commission plan constitutes an unfair method of competition, the court of appeals departed from the principles enunciated by this Court in Atlantic Refining for reviewing Commission determinations that particular practices violate Section 5; has raised serious doubt as to the general legality of such plans when utilized by major oil and major tire companies; and creates discriminatory treatment of major competitors in the oil and tire industries, since two major firms in each industry have been enjoined from entering into such agreements while Texaco and Goodrich now are free to continue their substantially identical plan and, indeed, to enter into new ones. By thus permitting Texaco, without making any investment in distributional facilities or TBA inventory, to receive substantial commissions for the sale of TBA to its service stations while, for example, its smaller competitor, Atlantic Refining Company, is barred from the same economic opportunity, the decision results in what the Commission said would be "a harmful competitive imbalance among the leading firms" in both the oil and tire industries (App. B, infra, p. 56). At the same time, the decision suggests a blueprint by which all except those enjoined in the Atlantic and Shell cases can achieve the same anti-competitive economic consequences that concerned the Commission and the reviewing courts in those cases, and thus it constricts the economic effectiveness of this Court's holding in Atlantic. Review by this Court is plainly warranted.

In Atlantic Refining this Court held that, in reviewing a Commission determination that a particular business practice constitutes an unfair method of competition, judicial review "is limited to determining whether the Commission's decision has 'warrant in the record' and a reasonable basis in law," and that the courts "necessarily 'must give weight to the Commission's conclusions'" (381 U.S. at 367-368). The Court there held that the Commission's conclusion that the Atlantic-Goodyear sales commission plan was an unfair method of competition satisfied both of those criteria. In the present case the court of appeals, applying these standards to test the Commission's finding that the similar Texaco-Goodrich plan had the same basic anticompetitive effect, reviewed the agency's decision by comparing the extent to which the parties in the present case had utilized the methods employed in the Atlantic case for bringing to bear the oil company's economic power upon its dealers. Fairly read, however, Atlantic does not even suggest that the validity of other sales commission plans is to be determined on such a basis; the particular techniques used by Atlantic Refining and Goodyear were not essential elements of the finding of illegality, but rather methods by which those companies exercised their power in that particular case. If a sales commission plan has the basic vice involved in Atlantic—"the utilization of economic power in one market to curtail competition in another" (381 U.S. at 369)—the Commission properly may find it to be an unfair method of competition, even though different methods may be used, and to different degrees, in exercising such power. Tested by the proper standards, the Commission was fully warranted in concluding that the Texaco-Goodrich plan—no less than the Atlantic and Shell plans—violates Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

In Atlantic this Court upheld the Commission's conclusion that the illegality in TBA sales commission arrangements results from the existence and exercise of the oil company's dominant economic power over its dealers. While both the Commission and the court of appeals in Atlantic had found that the oil company had engaged in coercive practices, nothing in this Court's opinion indicated that the use of coercion was the factor which made the agreement illegal. On the contrary, the Court expressly noted that the Commission's view was that coercive practices were merely "symptomatic of a more fundamental restraint of trade" (381 U.S. at 361) and that illegal "effects on competition flowed from the contract itself." (381 U.S. at 370.) The fundamental evil of the sales commission plan involved in Atlantic was the "utilization of economic power in one market to curtail competition in another" (381 U.S. at 369). Moreover, this Court recognized "the destructive effect on commerce that would result from the widespread use of these contracts by major oil companies and suppliers" (381 U.S. at 371).

Consistently with Atlantic, the Commission in the instant case concluded that the various promotional activities undertaken by Texaco "constitute a forceful exercise of its economic power over its dealers" (App. B, infra, p. 58). The court of appeals, however, set this finding aside, stating: "We can glean nothing from the utterances of the Supreme Court which alters the basic rules that a finding of coercion is the threshold requirement of a determination of exercise of dominant economic power." (App. A, infra, p. 30.) The court thus failed to perceive that the basic evil of the sales commission plan here, as in Atlantic, was the use of the oil company's economic power, not the particular means—whether labeled "coercion" or not—by which it was exercised. Nothing in the Atlantic opinion indicates that a sales commission plan having anticompetitive effects would be saved from illegality because the oil company could accomplish its objective and thereby earn its commissions without going beyond the "promotional" activities specified in the plan.

This economic fact of life was recognized by the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit in the Shell case. There the court specifically set aside the Commission's finding that Shell had coerced its dealers into purchasing sponsored TBA but nonetheless found that Shell had exercised its economic power and affirmed the Commission's order. (360 F. 2d at 481–483). The promotional activities engaged in by both Texaco (see supra, p. 6) and Shell in performance of their sales commission agreements are very similar and have the same anti-competitive effect. It is, at bottom, inconsistent with the legal premises underlying the Fifth Circuit's decision for the court of appeals in the present case to have set aside the Commission's order for the articulated reason that "In short, we do not find that Texaco used its controlling economic power to compel its dealers to purchase sponsored TBA." (App. A, infra, p. 34.) [Emphasis added.] It is therefore not an exaggeration to say that these two courts of appeals are in conflict concerning the legal standards by which the Commission is governed in such cases.

Moreover, the Commission in the instant case properly heeded the ruling of this Court in Atlantic that the Commission need not engage in an extensive economic analysis, nor permit the parties to show countervailing economic benefits, if a "not insubstantial" amount of commerce is restrained by the TBA sales commission arrangement (383 U.S. at 371). Since sales of sponsored TBA to Texaco dealers in one year exceeded total sales to Atlantic dealers during a six-year period (SJA 182), the substantiality of commerce requirement clearly was satisfied in this case.

The broad discretion the Commission has to define unfair methods of competition is particularly pertinent in this case because, in reviewing its record, the Commission had the benefit of its experience gained in its comprehensive investigation into the functioning and effects of sales commission agreements for the sale of TBA in this and the related cases. Its orders enjoining such agreements in the companion cases have been affirmed on review, and its conclusions concerning the anticompetitive potential of such agreements have been approved by this Court. It properly drew upon its experience to conclude that, on the record before it, similar restraints, sufficient to justify condemnation, were present in the Texaco-Goodrich arrangement. Yet the court below, instead of limiting itself to a search for "warrant in the record" (see Atlantic Refining, supra, p. 11) undertook to substitute its judgment for the Commission's in analyzing the anticompetitive effect of the arrangement.

An example is the court's analysis of the Commission's finding that Texaco exercised its economic power over its dealers to promote sponsored TBA. The court's contrary holding, to the extent that it does not rest on the legally erroneous conclusion that overt coercion is a prerequisite to a finding of exercise of economic power, see supra, pp. 10, 13–14, is based upon a meticulous comparison of specific practices present in Atlantic, but not present, or present to a lesser degree, here. (App. A, infra, pp. 32–34.) But the bulk of the Commission's conclusions with respect to promotion by Texaco of Goodrich TBA are undisturbed. In particular the court did not question that the Texaco salesman continually carries the promotional message in his day-to-day contacts with dealers. Yet the Commission found this "perhaps most effective of all" (App. B, infra, p. 59) as an exercise of economic power because the salesman, most directly involved in promoting TBA, is also an important factor in evaluating dealers to help determine if their leases or contracts with Texaco will be renewed. Nor did the court come to grips with the Commission's observation that, as in Atlantic, the oil company, without any investment in inventory or facilities, and without assuming any burden of sales, distribution or service, receives large commissions for promotional activities it is bound to perform under the contract. (App. B, infra, pp. 55–56.) "It is difficult to escape the conclusion that there would have been little point in paying substantial commissions to oil companies were it not for their ability to exert power over their wholesalers and dealers * * * " Atlantic Ref. Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, supra at 376, and it is further difficult to believe that Goodrich would have continued to pay the substantial commissions it did in the present case unless results indicated to it that this power was being effectively exercised.

Similarly, the court's conclusion that Texaco dealers were "free" to choose nonsponsored TBA, which rests in part upon a misconception of the record,[4] is in any event irrelevant to the question whether the Commission's judgment is legally and factually supportable. The Commission found substantial evidence that Texaco dealers were made aware that the company had a strong interest in their sale of sponsored TBA and that many of them believed that Texaco would look with disfavor upon their purchase of nonsponsored TBA. Thus competing suppliers were not able to gain access to these outlets (App. B, infra, p. 60). The court below found this evidence outweighed by contrary testimony and insufficient to sup-

[4] The court said, "The Commission's contentions must be weighed against the Examiner's finding that Texaco dealers, unlike those of Atlantic and Shell, were free to accept or reject sponsored products." (App. A p. 32). This statement apparently refers to Findings 18 and 19 of the hearing examiner's decision of September 24, 1962, but, in fact, is not supported by any findings made by the examiner. Finding 18 refers to the Texaco policy set forth in a June 1, 1948, letter that dealers were independent businessmen and were not to be forced into handling any particular merchandise. Finding 19, however, states, "This policy was not transmitted to the Texas dealers except on occasion, and then orally, by salesmen or other personnel, and it was only after the dealer sold a sufficient amount of lubricating oil to warrant the payment of a discount or rebate that he was informed by letter that he was free to select any brand of TBA merchandise which he might elect and that the only interest Texas had was to help him market that merchandise at a profit so that his business would be more successful in every way" (JA 215).

A purported company policy affecting dealers which was not communicated to the dealers until such time as they had established a relationship with the company satisfactory to Texaco is largely irrelevant to the question whether dealers were in fact free to select TBA of their choice.

port a finding of substantial market foreclosure (App. A, infra, pp. 36–38). But the question for the Commission was not whether all Texaco dealers, or most Texaco dealers, felt constrained to purchase sponsored TBA. The Commission had determined, through its examination of the sales commission method of promoting TBA, that the most significant anticompetitive effect of the practice was the foreclosure to nonsponsored brands of an opportunity to sell in the substantial market represented by dealer outlets of contracting major oil companies. In Atlantic this Court recognized "the destructive effect upon commerce that would result from the widespread use of these contracts by major oil companies and suppliers * * *." 381 U.S. at 371. Having identified a significant tendency toward the same anticompetitive effect which had been the principal basis for condemning similar sales commission arrangements, the Commission was not obliged to await the development of the identifiable foreclosure into a "full-blown" restraint, before concluding that the Texaco-Goodrich arrangement, like its counterparts, was a violation of Section 5. See Federal Trade Commission v. Brown Shoe Co., supra at 321–322; Federal Trade Commission v. Motion Picture Adv. Co., 344 U.S. 392, 394–395.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, RESPONDENT

Petitions to Review an Order of the
Federal Trade Commission

Decided September 25, 1967

Before BAZELON, Chief Judge, WILBUR K. MILLER, Senior Circuit Judge, and BURGER, Circuit Judge.

BURGER, Circuit Judge: Eleven years after the issuance of a complaint and sixteen years after an investigation was initiated,[1] this case returns to us from the Federal Trade Commission for the second time; in the interim, following our prior review, the Supreme Court remanded for further consideration. See Texaco, Inc. v. F.T.C., 118 U.S. App. D.C. 366, 336 F. 2d 754 (1964), remanded, 381 U.S. 739 (1965).

[1] The investigation was originally instituted in 1936 but was inactive for many years. Serious investigation was renewed between 1949 and 1951 and from 1951 on all six companies

In 1956 the Federal Trade Commission brought proceedings against major oil and rubber companies, simultaneously instituted by substantially identical complaints, alleging as an unlawful method of competition prohibited by Section 5 of the Federal Trade Act, 38 Stat. 719 (1914), 15 U.S.C. § 45 (1964), the sales commission method of distributing tires, batteries, and accessories, called the "TBA" plan. Under that plan the tire and rubber companies pay commissions to the oil companies on sales of the tire companies' TBA to the oil companies' dealers. Each complaint paired one of the large tire and rubber product manufacturers and a large oil company with which it had contracted. The pairings were Texaco and B. F. Goodrich, Shell and Firestone, and Atlantic and Goodyear.[1] were the subject of a single joint investigation which was completed in 1954. See Hearings Before Subcommittee No. 1 of the House Select Committee on Small Business on the Organization and Procedures of the Federal Regulatory Commissions and their Effect on Small Business, 84th Cong., 1st Sess. 447–48 (1956).

(1) Background. In 1961 the Commission rendered separate decisions in each of the three TBA cases. In both Atlantic-Goodyear[2] and Shell-Firestone,[3] the Commission found coercion, unlawful tie-ins, and ad-

[1] The pairings were based on the most substantial agreements challenged, although the complaints also challenged the contracts of each respondent with other oil and tire companies not parties to the particular actions.

verse competitive effects resulting from the TBA sales commission agreements. In contrast, however, the Commission in Texaco-Goodrich[5] found no coercion and remanded the case to the Hearing Examiner for additional evidence on anticompetitive effects.[6] One year later the Examiner filed a revised decision in which he added new findings and reached new and contrary conclusions without complying with the Commission's directive to take additional evidence.

Prior to the second decision, because of statements made about the then pending case by Commission Chairman Paul Rand Dixon to the National Congress of Petroleum Retailers, Inc. in Denver, Colorado, on July 25, 1961, Texaco filed a motion before the Commission that Chairman Dixon withdraw from participating or that he be disqualified. The motion was denied and Chairman Dixon participated in the decision. On April 15, 1963, the Commission affirmed the new conclusions of the Examiner that the agreements

[6] The Commission's first remand order declared:

> The determination of whether Texaco's exercise of such economic power in favor of Firestone and Goodyear under the oil company's sales commission contracts with these rubber companies constitutes an unfair method of competition depends, therefore, upon the competitive effects of these sales commission contracts; not upon whether Texaco has exercised its power to implement such contracts through the exercise of overt coercive tactics or by more subtle but equally effective means. 58 F.T.C. at 1178 (emphasis in the original).

Only one member of the Commission who had participated in the 1961 remand for additional evidence was on the Commission when the case came back in 1963; he dissented on the ground that the Examiner had failed to comply with the Commission's remand order. The order had explicitly directed the Examiner to take additional evidence on the sales agreement which the Commission considered indispensable to its disposition of the case.

were unlawful,' but offered no explanation for doing so without the new evidence earlier thought necessary.

On appeal from the second Commission decision this Court in 1964 unanimously held that

> Chairman Dixon's participation in the hearing amounted * * * to a denial of due process which invalidated the order under review * * *. His Denver speech, made before the matter was submitted to the Commission * * * plainly reveals that he had already concluded that Texaco and Goodrich were violating the Act * * *.

Supra at 372, 336 F. 2d at 760. In the Supreme Court the Solicitor General did not challenge this Court's conclusion of disqualifying bias on the part of the Commission Chairman. With respect to the merits, a majority of this Court held that there had been a fundamental failure of proof. Our opinion stated:

> We see nothing illegal or even unethical in the payment of commissions for such services, except in instances where an oil marketing company forces its dealers through coercive tactics or controlling economic power to buy the sponsored products. Neither of these inferences was proved in this case, and it may not be presumed that either will exist in future similar situations.

Id. at 375, 336 F. 2d at 763 [emphasis added]. We dismissed the complaint because of this lack of proof and because the undue protraction of the administrative process constituted a denial of due process.

Meanwhile, the Seventh Circuit affirmed the Commission in the Atlantic case, Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. v. F.T.C., 331 F. 2d 394 (7th Cir. 1964), and the alleged conflict between this Circuit and the Seventh Circuit was asserted in the petition for certiorari. The writ was subsequently granted.[4]

In Atlantic Refining Co. v. F.T.C., 381 U.S. 357 (1965), the Supreme Court affirmed the Seventh Circuit holding that the Atlantic TBA sales commission agreements were an unfair method of competition. One week later in a per curiam opinion the Court granted the Commission's petition for a writ of certiorari in Texaco, and remanded with instructions > to remand it immediately to the Federal Trade Commission for further proceedings, without the participation of Chairman Dixon,[5] in light of Atlantic Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, ante, p. 537.

381 U.S. 739 (1965). Pursuant to the remand from this court, the Commission issued an order on June 18, 1965 (a) vacating its prior 1963 decision, (b) denominating the proceedings before the Commission as appeals from the Examiner's 1962 decision, (c) permitting oral argument and the filing of briefs, and (d) instructing counsel to "focus on the question whether the facts of record in the present case bring it within the Supreme Court's decision in the Atlantic Refining Co. case." Order of the Federal Trade Commission Vacating Prior Decision and Order and Setting Hearing on Remand, In the Matter of The

[5] Chairman Dixon, having been disqualified did not participate nor did Commissioner MacIntyre. Thus only three Commissioners have participated in the opinion and order now under review. None of the three members participating were members of the 1961 Commission which directed the Examiner to take additional evidence on the competitive effects of the sales commission contracts.

B.F. Goodrich Co. and The Texas Co., Docket No. 6485, June 18, 1965.

In January, 1966, the Commission entered an order and filed an opinion, which is the subject of this appeal. The Commission held:

> In our view the Supreme Court's decision in Atlantic compels the conclusion that the Texaco-Goodrich plan is an unfair method of competition and that Texaco and Goodrich, as were Atlantic and Goodyear, should be prohibited from performing or entering into any other sales commission plans.

— F.T.C. —, — (1966). The Commission thus held that the sales commission agreement involved here was indistinguishable in fundamental operation and effect from the one held unlawful in Atlantic.

(2) Contentions. The Commission contends that (1) the TBA sales commission system is inherently unlawful without regard to any acts of overt coercion and argues that this is implicit in the remand in light of Atlantic; (2) by its use of the sales commission system, Texaco has in fact exercised its economic power over its dealers in favor of Goodrich sponsored products; and (3) the sales commission system has given Goodrich an unfair competitive advantage.

Texaco's position is (1) that the coercion provision of the Commission's latest order entered against Texaco is not justified on the record; (2) that this order is erroneous independent of the sales commission program; and (3) that the Supreme Court's remand to the Commission required that the asserted illegality of Texaco's sales commission program be re-determined in light of Atlantic; furthermore, that illegality under the Atlantic holding can be shown only by proof that Texaco coerced dealers to purchase sponsored merchandise and that anticompetitive effects followed. Additionally, Texaco contends that the administrative process has been abused by the unduly long drawn out nature of the proceedings and that this constitutes harassment and warrants dismissal of the proceedings independent of the merits.

We must now determine whether the Commission has complied with the remand order and correctly applied the applicable principles enunciated in the Atlantic holding.

(3) The Atlantic Holding. Our analysis must begin with the decision in Atlantic. In the Shell-Firestone case, the third TBA case decided after Atlantic, the Fifth Circuit interpreted the Atlantic rationale as based on three essential components, the application of each depending on the facts of the particular case before the court:

> (a) the oil company's dominant economic power over its dealers;
> (b) exercise of that power over its dealers;
> (c) anticompetitive effects of using that power.

Shell Oil Co. v. F.T.C., 360 F. 2d 470, 477 (5th Cir. 1966), cert. denied, 385 U.S. 1002 (1967). Both the Commission and Texaco agree with this view of the Atlantic holding and this view was essentially adopted by the Solicitor General in the Supreme Court. Our consideration of Atlantic leads us to the same view as that of the Fifth Circuit in Shell; in short we conclude with Judge Wisdom that the Court hovered near the brink but did not lay down a per se rule.[10]

[10] Several factors compel this conclusion. In the first place, although the Commission took the position that the sales commission contract was illegal per se, the Seventh Circuit implicitly rejected such a view, and the absence of the words, "per se" in the Atlantic opinion "could hardly have been an accident." Shell, supra at 477.

Secondly, the Court has stated that when it has had no previous opportunity to assay the effects on competition of a

(a) Existence of Dominant Economic Power

In our prior opinion we found "no basis in the record for the Commission's conclusion that Texaco has controlling economic power over its dealers;" supra at 374, 336 F. 2d at 762. In Atlantic the Court viewed the question of dominant economic power not only in terms of the statistical facts used to show economic dependence but also in terms of specific control devices: (1) control over oil and gas supply; (2) control over dealers through short term leases, equipment loans, etc.; (3) control over advertising; (4) leverage from financial promotion; and (5) housekeeping requirements of leases. Such devices have often been alluded to in demonstrating dominant economic power and leverage. See, e.g., Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13 (1964); United States v. Loew's, Inc., 371 U.S. 38, 45 (1962).

While the statistical material in the record here is ambiguous, the record fairly demonstrates what is a matter of common acceptance, that both Texaco and B. F. Goodrich are among the giants of their respective industries,[11] and as such control large economic leverage.

new form of economic activity, it will not declare that activity illegal per se. White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 261 (1963); see also Mr. Justice Goldberg's dissenting opinion in Atlantic, 381 U.S. at 389–90. But cf. United States v. Arnold, Schwinn & Co., 388 U.S. 365, 385–86 (1967) (Stewart, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part).

[11] The myriad figures present in our voluminous record support a statistical analysis which assumes dominant economic power. Similar statistics have been fully discussed in the Shell case. 360 F. 2d at 479–82 & nn. 21–23.

We think it is sufficient to note the following facts: Goodrich is one of our largest rubber product manufacturers and its sales in 1954, one of the years on which the complaint is based, exceeded $500 million dollars. Texaco sales in the same year ex-

Many, but not all, of the control devices mentioned in Atlantic are present to some degree here. Texaco, of course, controls the supply of oil and gas to its dealers, and the relatively heavy cost of constructing and maintaining a modern service station enables Texaco to maintain substantial economic leverage through the use of loans, short-term leases, and equipment financing. However. we agree with Judge Wisdom that "the dominance of a major oil company over its dealers comes from the leverage inherent in the structure and economics of the petroleum distribution system * * *" 360 F. 2d at 481.

In our earlier opinion we concluded that on the whole record there was no substantial evidence that Texaco had exercised controlling economic power over its dealers, as the Commission had found. Similarly, after careful review of the record, we had concluded that there was no basis for a finding of coercion and that read as a whole the record demonstrated the contrary. We should note at the outset that nothing said by the Supreme Court in Atlantic bears on that holdceeded one and one-half billion dollars. The 30,000 Texaco stations which might be subject to the sales commission plan constituted some 16.5% of all service stations in the United States. Finally, from 1952 to 1956 Goodrich sales to all Texaco accounts rose from 12.7 million dollars to 18.9 million dollars. We think these not-insubstantial figures sufficiently support the requirements of a statistical analysis of dominant economic power.

We should make clear, however, our view that statistics alone would not be sufficient to support the finding that Texaco exercises dominant economic power. The statistical record supports our conclusion that the Commission has not set forth with sufficient clarity an adequate statistical record to sustain its other findings.

ing and nothing said by the Commission since the remand alters that conclusion.

We can glean nothing from the utterances of the Supreme Court which alters the basic rule that a finding of coercion is the threshold requirement of a determination of exercise of dominant economic power. As the Commission has noted, it did not ask the Supreme Court to review our holding that the record did not sustain a finding of coercion. Equally true is the fact that in the Atlantic case the Seventh Circuit's sustaining of the Commission's findings of coercion were not appealed. But, in spite of this lack of challenge by Atlantic and by the Commission in both cases, the Supreme Court in Atlantic did not ignore record evidence of Atlantic's coercive conduct. Indeed, that Court was well aware that the coercion was found to have permeated the entire Atlantic program, contaminating even its neutral conduct.

The Commission argues that Atlantic's coercion merely aggravated the restraint imposed by the sales commission plan. We do not so read Atlantic. If the Supreme Court concluded that the sales commission plan was inherently illegal when entered into by a major oil company, it would have had no occasion to take cognizance of the coercive practices and no remand of this case would have been required. Yet the Atlantic opinion is replete with references to these practices and we cannot escape the conclusion that the overt coercive acts practiced by Atlantic were deemed essential to the ultimate action of the Court. It is surely of some significance that in almost every page of the Atlantic opinion there is some such reference, e.g., "overt acts," overt coercive pressures," "direct and overt threats," etc., 381 U.S. at 368, 373, 376.

The Commission now asserts that since it did not rely upon coercion as a basis for invalidating Texaco's sales commission agreements, the Supreme Court action vacating our judgment implies a total rejection of Texaco's position. The combination of Atlantic's emphasis on overt coercion, to which we have just alluded, the failure of the Commission to challenge our prior holding on this issue when seeking review, and the absence of any reference to the subject in the Supreme Court Per Curiam opinion on remand all tend strongly to negate the Commission's argument. Had the Commission urged on the Supreme Court a per se rule of illegality stemming from mere existence of economic power, its failure to challenge our holding on absence of coercion would be understandable.

We have difficulty reconciling the Commission argument with the fact of a remand in this case. If the Supreme Court viewed its holding in Atlantic as treating contractual arrangements between the oil company and its dealers in and out of themselves as giving rise to controlling economic power, and that mere salesmanship without any coercion constituted unlawful exercise of such power, there would have been nothing to remand. The Supreme Court could have simply reversed and reinstated the Commission's order.

Of course we realize, as did Judge Wisdom in Shell, that the "Company's use of its economic power through the sales commission plan to cause its dealers to buy sponsored TBA even in the absence of overt coercion" can constitute an unfair method of competition and a violation of section 5, Shell at 482–83 [emphasis added]. The Commission also recognizes this and therefore argues that each of the "non-coercive practices" referred to in Atlantic are present in equal degree in this case. The Commission argues that the references to these practices in Atlantic compels a conclusion that even the non-coercive practices arising from the contractual relationship constitute the exercise of economic power over dealers. The Commission's contentions must be weighed against the Examiner's finding that Texaco dealers, unlike those of Atlantic and Shell, were free to accept or reject sponsored products. This view of the Examiner may have been influenced by the circumstance that only 5 former Texaco dealers testified to facts which would sustain a finding of coercive practices and more than 50 present and some former dealers testified to the contrary.

In light of all this we do not read Atlantic to conclude that the Court was condemning these practices as per se illegal. They were indicative of Atlantic's conduct, of a character not shown in this record, of marshalling "its full economic power in a continuing campaign to force its dealers and wholesalers to buy Goodyear products," 381 U.S. at 371. A few examples will suffice:

(1) Sales Practices. In Atlantic, the oil company

> was to instruct its salesmen to urge dealers to "vigorously" represent Goodyear, and to "cooperate with and assist" Goodyear in its efforts to promote and increase the sale" by Atlantic dealers of Goodyear products.

381 U.S. at 365. The Commission characterizes the evidence here as substantially identical. Yet the Examiner was satisfied that Texaco policy since at least 1948 has been to permit each dealer to choose whatever brand TBA he desires.[12]

[12] This policy in part states:

> The Texas Company's selling personnel are expected to become familiar with Firestone and Goodrich Inventory Guide Systems and TBA merchandise and the merchandising of TBA products generally. But it should be clearly

The Commission now argues that "on each visit, the [Texaco] salesman offers to write up sponsored TBA orders," but the Commission itself in the order presently under review struck the Examiner's finding that Texaco "salesmen were encouraged by [Texaco] management to write up orders for sponsored TBA without waiting for a formal request from a dealer."

(2) Dual Solicitation and Advance Notification. In Atlantic there was a regular practice of

> "double teaming" solicitation of Atlantic outlets by representatives of both companies to convert them to Goodyear products. They were to call on the dealers together, take stock orders, furnish initial price lists and project future quotas of purchases of Goodyear products.

381 U.S. at 365. The Commission contends such practices are prevalent in this record. The Examiner found that "double teaming" and advance solicitation—notice to the tire companies that a new station was about to become operable—were isolated and sporadic practices, not a regular or even frequent practice as was the case with Atlantic's operations. They appeared in Atlantic in the context of an entire system designed to overtly coerce its dealers. This is not the state of the record before us.

(3) Dealer Policing and Credit Cards. In Atlantic the understood that we will render equal assistance to all dealers in setting up and maintaining his own basic TBA stock assortment and Inventory Guide system along these lines regardless of the brand of merchandise handled. * * * [The Inventory Guide] is not applied in any manner whatsoever that would impair any dealer's freedom to purchase such brands and quantities of TBA merchandise as he desires.

Our dealers, consignees and distributors are independent businessmen, and instructions that no undue influence is to be used to interfere with their free and independent judgment remain unchanged.

Supreme Court was confronted with evidence that Atlantic imposed quotas on dealers and effectively policed them by the use of a reporting system of purchases and sales of TBA. In the original appeal to this Court, the Commission contended that the quota and policing system were also used by Texaco. In the present appeal the Commission has retreated from this position. As to credit card policy, the Examiner carefully distinguished the Atlantic record from the instant record and significantly found that Texaco does permit dealers to charge non-sponsored TBA on its credit cards.[13]

(4) Geographical Supply Points. In Atlantic, Goodyear required that Atlantic assign its dealers to a single point of TBA supply. This geographical division of supply points is not present in our record and, indeed, the Examiner found that as to sponsored TBA sales, each dealer did not buy exclusively from, and was not limited to, any particular supply point but was free to deal with any source he chose.

These few examples demonstrate a different set of facts between the Atlantic record and this case. On the basis of the record before us we cannot conclude that Texaco exploited its service station market illegally for the benefit of itself and Goodrich. In short, we do not find that Texaco used its controlling economic power to compel its dealers to purchase sponsored TBA.

[13] Since 1955 Texaco practice is to permit deferred payment of sponsored TBA on credit. Thus, three months is permitted on purchases of $30 or more, six months on purchases of $50 or more. The Examiner held that this limitation of deferred payment to sponsored TBA was altogether reasonable and proper. But the record also shows that dealers continue to charge non-sponsored TBA on a monthly basis without a dollar limitation.

(c) Anticompetitive Effects.

Atlantic's third requirement for finding a violation of section 5 is that the TBA sales commission contracts must result in adverse competitive effects on the relevant market. As we have previously noted, the first Commission remand of the case to the Examiner in 1961 was because of the need for additional evidence on the issue of anticompetitive effects. We have further noted that no such evidence was forthcoming. In our prior review of this case we also found that evidence of anticompetitive effects was lacking.

The Commission urges the following three guidelines to be the essence of the Atlantic holding on anticompetitive effects:

> (1) Extensive economic analysis of the competitive effect based on examination of the entire TBA market is unnecessary.
>
> (2) Evidence of economic justification or benefit to the parties concerned is immaterial.
> (3) It is sufficient when the Commission finds that a substantial portion of commerce is affected.

This, of course, explains the Commission position that the TBA system is an "inherently anticompetitive" device from which "competitive injury must result." This is simply a renewed intimation of a per se rule in Atlantic and needs little discussion since we have already rejected that reading. It is true, of course, that the guidelines suggested by the Commission are referred to in the Atlantic opinion, e.g., 381 U.S. at 370–371. But it is also true, as Judge Wisdom pointed out in his discussion of these guidelines, that the Court in Atlantic looked to the full record for examples of anticompetitive effects. 360 F. 2d at 483. Indeed, the Court was very clear on this point:

> The anticompetitive effects of this program are clear on the record and render unnecessary extensive economic analysis of market percentages or business justifications * * *

381 U.S. at 371.

Bearing in mind the Fifth Circuit's caveat of an overlap between a discussion of anticompetitive effects and the exercise of dominant economic power, we proceed to examine the record before us. As Atlantic noted, the question is whether the TBA system "impaired competition at three levels [manufacturing, wholesaling, and retailing] of the tires, batteries and accessories industry," id. at 370. And, of course, it goes without saying that the type of competition at these levels—interbrand and intrabrand—is highly relevant.

(a) Interbrand Competition

Under the TBA system interbrand competition manifests itself, if at all, most perceptively at the wholesale level. We recognize that wholesalers of competing TBA brands may well be substantially limited in selling their products to service stations under contract with major oil companies. The TBA system may deprive retailers of their freedom of choice as to the TBA products they may choose. Such competitive effects also reach back to the manufacturing level. For example, to the extent that wholesalers are unable to sell their products to service outlets, the manufacturers may suffer injury. To that extent producers' distribution systems may be impaired and expansion potential circumscribed.[14]

As an example of interbrand anticompetitive effects in Atlantic the Court found a classic division of territories between Goodyear and Firestone, the two manufacturers involved: "Firestone and Goodyear were excluded from selling to Atlantic's dealers in each other's territories," 381 U.S. at 370. Flowing directly from this was the further adverse effect that Atlantic dealers could only buy at the prices designated by supplier to whom the territory had been allocated, ibid. Finally, there was little doubt but that the combination of these and other practices in the Atlantic record, including the resort to overt coercion, had the drastic anticompetitive effect of almost completely foreclosing the market to Altanic's own retailers and wholesalers who desired to sell brands other than sponsored products and to wholesalers and manufacturers of competing brands with similar desires.

We have earlier noted the fact that the record before us is devoid of evidence disclosing any form of territorial division of markets on the part of the sponsored manufacturers. And we have also referred to the long standing Texaco policy that Texaco dealers are free to purchase any brand of TBA which they desire to sell. See note 12, supra. Similarly, there is no evidence that any form of price dictation occurred.

But the most significant evidence on the question of interbrand anticompetitive effects concerns the testimony of Texaco dealers and sponsored and competing suppliers. The Commission relies upon testimony of former Texaco dealers and competing TBA suppliers to the effect that nonsponsored TBA could not be sold to Texaco dealers because of the dealer's understanding that they were required to purchase sponsored TBA. The Commission corroborates this testimony with "representative evidence" that in certain Texaco districts the percentage of dealers who carried sponsored TBA ranges from 70% to 89%. This evidence and these figures were rejected by the Examiner in his original decision and by the first Commission decision. The Examiner's modification of this position, which as we noted was made with no new evidence, was affirmed by the second Commission decision, and this Court rejected those findings on the prior appeal as unsupported in the record. Nothing has developed to change our view, and indeed on remand the Commission has stricken the Examiner's finding. The Commission now limits its characterization of the testimony of competing suppliers to a statement that "practically all of the representatives of the competitors of Goodrich called as witnesses testified" that they were foreclosed from the Texaco service station market. We simply cannot regard this as "representative;" such a conclusion is not supported by substantial evidence, except in isolated instances which were generally contradicted by overwhelming rebuttal evidence. Nor can we accept the Commission view that the rebuttal testimony is to be discounted because witnesses are under "pressure" from Texas. A finding of pressure on witnesses before a tribunal is not one to be lightly inferred and ought not be made without evidence of some kind; none is suggested by the Commission on this score.

(b) Intrabrand Competition

A second form of competition, intrabrand, is the inevitable result of the supply point system noted in Atlantic. The adverse anticompetitive effects are similar to those found in interbrand competition—pricing, territorial market foreclosure, and full-line forcing.[11]

[11] In the Atlantic case, the Seventh Circuit found that

> [B]oth Goodyear and Firestone said that they would refuse to sell only tires under the sales commission plan and insisted that they be allowed to handle batteries and accessories as well as their own products.

351 F. 2d at 398.

Without laboring the point, we have already noted that the record in the instant case simply cannot be said to reflect substantial evidence to support a finding that these practices exist in a measure adequate to demonstrate that the Texaco TBA contract causes adverse anticompetitive effects. We therefore hold that there is an absence of substantial evidence which supports a finding of anticompetitive effects.

The Commission maintains that the first Commission opinion remanding for evidence of anticompetitive effects was "enigmatic," and that it is enough that a substantial portion of commerce is affected under the rationale of Atlantic. Surely there is nothing obscure or ambiguous in a remand predicated on an absence of crucial evidence especially where the remand directs a further inquiry for relevant evidence. And we find no basis for treating the Atlantic case as carrying the test of quantitative substantiality to the brink of extremism by a strained literalism. Indeed, we are inclined to believe that the Commission views the situation, as the Commission opinion and brief candidly concede, as one in which it would be arbitrary and inequitable to bar Atlantic and Shell, who are very much like Texaco in broad outline, from use of the sales commission plan while permitting Texaco to continue its operation. We agree that it would be inequitable, and indeed a dereliction of the Commission's obligations, provided that all three were guilty of substantially equal violations of section 5. But simply because Texaco is in the same line of business does not mean it must suffer the pain of the misdeeds of other oil companies; this would indeed by guilt by association. We conclude that the record simply does not support a finding that Texaco violated the Act. We therefore hold that while the record shows Texaco indeed has dominant economic power, it is fatally deficient on the crucial issues of exercise of that power and subsequent anticompetitive effects.

CONCLUSION

One course available to us would be to remand this case once again to the Commission to permit it to develop additional evidence for the record [16] but the Commission and Examiner have had abundant opportunity—and direct mandate—to do this in the past and have not done so. We think the time has now come to terminate these protracted proceedings and dismiss the complaint. We recognize that the Commission's obligations and the public interest in preserving competition are not to be lightly dealt with but the Commission has now had more than an adequate opportunity to develop a record in support of its section 5 contentions over a period of fourteen years. Accordingly, the Commission order under review is set aside and remanded to the Commission with directions to dismiss the complaint.

Reversed and Remanded.

[16] Even in a remand to the Commission for further proceedings it would have been imperative to make clear our view that the coercion aspect of the Commission order has no basis in law, or the record. Since we have twice determined there is no basis that Texaco overtly coerced any substantial number of dealers or that a pattern of coercion existed, the provisions of the order prohibiting such coercion were and are baseless.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA BEFORE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

Docket No. 6485

In the Matter of The B. F. Goodrich Company, and The Texas Company, corporations.

OPINION OF THE COMMISSION

By Commissioner Elman:

On April 15, 1963, the Commission held unlawful as an unfair method of competition in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act[1] a sales commission agreement between The B. F. Goodrich Company ("Goodrich") and Texaco, Inc. ("Texaco"). Under that agreement Goodrich pays Texaco a commission for promoting the sale of Goodrich tires, batteries, and automotive accessories ("TBA") to its retail gasoline dealers. By its order, the Commission enjoined Goodrich and Texaco from carrying out their agreement and from performing or entering into sales commission arrangements with any other companies. On review, the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit set aside the Commission's order and directed the Commission to dismiss the complaint. Texaco, Inc. v. F.T.C., 336 F. 2d 754 (D.C. Cir. 1964). On June 7, 1965, the Supreme Court granted certiorari, vacated the judgment of the Court of Appeals, and directed that the case be remanded to the Commission "for further proceedings, without the participation of Chairman Dixon, in light of Atlantic Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, [381 U.S. 357 (1965)]." F.T.C. v. Texaco, Inc., 381 U.S. 739, 740.

[1] Section 5 provides in relevant part:

"Unfair methods of competition in commerce, and unfair or deceptive acts or practices in commerce, are declared unlawful."

In Atlantic, the Supreme Court upheld (1) the Commission's decision that a sales commission agreement between Atlantic Refining Company and Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company was an unfair method of competition, and (2) the Commission's order prohibiting Atlantic and Goodyear from carrying out their agreement and from performing or entering into any other sales commission agreements. The Commission, without the participation of Chairman Dixon and Commissioner MacIntyre, has reviewed afresh the entire record in this proceeding, in the light of the Supreme Court's decision in Atlantic. We have concluded, for the reasons set forth below, that the sales commission agreement involved here is, in its fundamental operation and effect, indistinguishable from the one held unlawful in Atlantic, and that an order like the one affirmed by the Supreme Court in Atlantic should be entered here.

I.

An assessment of the relationship between this case and Atlantic requires a brief description of the events leading to this remand. This is one of three companion cases in which the Commission challenged, as an unfair method of competition, sales commission arrangements between major rubber companies and major oil companies. In Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 58 F.T.C. 309, decided March 9, 1961, the Commission entered an order prohibiting Goodyear and Atlantic from employing sales commission plans. On the same day, in Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., 588 F.T.C. 371, an identical order was entered against Firestone and Shell Oil Company. The Commission's order in Goodyear has been affirmed by the Supreme Court. Atlantic Refining Co. v. F.T.C., 381 U.S. 357, affirming 331 F. 2d 394 (7th Cir. 1964). An appeal from the Commission's order in Firestone is pending in the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

In both Goodyear and Firestone the Commission's reasoning was identical: It upheld the hearing examiner's finding that the oil companies used overt coercive tactics to force their dealers to buy the sponsored rubber companies' TBA products. But the Commission specifically declined to rest its decisions upon a finding of coercion or to limit its orders to injunctions against coercive tactics. Instead, it examined the unique degree to which the economic existence of gasoline dealers is dependent upon the good will of their major oil company suppliers, and concluded that the oil company "has sufficient economic power with respect to its * * * distributors to cause them to purchase substantial quantities of sponsored TBA even without the use of overt coercive tactics * * *." (58 F.T.C. at 364–65, 407.) The Commission regarded "overt acts of coercion as mere symptoms of a more fundamental restraint of trade inherent in the sales commission itself" (58 F.T.C. at 348, 398). Analyzing the actual operation of the sales commission plan in the context of the economic relationship between the oil company and its dealers, the Commission con-concluded that the competitive effects of the sales commission plan were like those of an illegal tying arrangement—it "presents a classic example of the use of economic power in one market (here, gasoline distribution) to destroy competition in another market (TBA distribution)." (58 F.T.C. at 367; see 58 F.T.C. at 406). Since the amount of commerce affected was "not insubstantial", the agreements were held unlawful.

However, in this proceeding involving the Goodrich-Texaco sales commission plan, the Commission did not reach the same result. On the same day that it issued its orders in Goodyear and Firestone, the Commission held that although "Texaco has sufficient economic power over its wholesale and retail petroleum distributors to cause them to purchase substantial amounts of sponsored TBA even without the use of overt coercive tactics", the record did not contain "sufficient market data to enable the Commission to assess the competitive effects of the sales commission method of distributing TBA". The case was remanded to the hearing examiner for the taking of additional evidence on that issue. B. F. Goodrich Co., 58 F.T.C. 1176, 1178-79, 1183.

This disposition was, at the very least, enigmatic: In Goodyear, the Commission found that the competitive effect of the sales commission plan, like a tying arrangement, was the foreclosure of the substantial TBA marketing outlets represented by Atlantic's dealers. This finding was based upon competing wholesalers' testimony that they were unable to sell to Atlantic dealers who feared that Atlantic would look with disfavor upon their purchase of any but Atlantic-sponsored TBA products. Having made this finding, the Commission made no analysis of "market data" other than to observe that the amount of commerce affected was "not insubstantial" since Atlantic had sold about $50 million in sponsored TBA products during the period 1950–1956. (58 F.T.C. at 359–66.) In Goodrich the Commission did not reject the hearing examiner's acceptance of the testimony of competing wholesalers regarding foreclosure of Texaco outlets, which was similar to, and as substantial as, that in Goodyear. The amount of commerce affected in Goodrich was considerably more substantial than that in Goodyear: in the five-year period 1952–1956 Texaco sold more than $245 million in sponsored TBA, almost five times as much as was involved in Goodyear during a six-year period. What additional "market data" was required is unclear.[3]

On remand, after taking further evidence, the hearing examiner found that the sales commission plans had been shown to be an unfair method of competition, and entered an order identical to those previously entered in Goodyear and Firestone. An appeal was again taken to the Commission. By that time, the composition of the Commission had changed and only one of the Commissioners (Commissioner Anderson) who had participated in the Commission's earlier decision remained on the Commission. On this second appeal to the Commission, much of the evidence introduced on the remand was challenged as incompetent or immaterial. The Commission concluded that the challenged evidence was unnecessary to its decision, and, with Commissioner Anderson dissenting, upheld

[3] In Firestone the Commission did consider market share data relating to the entire market for TBA, including data relating to other outlets for TBA other than service stations, and other methods of distributing TBA other than sales commission plans. But none of this information was present in Goodyear, and so presumably this was not the kind of "market data" deemed critical by the Commission to a finding of illegality.

the examiner's order.[3] In its view, the legal principles under which the sales commission plans were held unlawful in Goodyear and Firestone were equally applicable to the Goodrich record, even without the challenged evidence (B. F. Goodrich Co., Docket 6485, order issued April 15, 1963).

On appeal, the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit reversed and ordered that the complaint be dismissed.[4] After holding that Chairman Dixon was barred from participating in the decision of the case, the Court of Appeals went on to reject the Commission's decision on the merits. It rejected the examiner's finding that Texaco employed coercive tactics and then held that "the Commission erred in concluding that Texaco has sufficient economic power over its dealers, without the use of coercive tactics, to cause them to buy substantial quantities of Goodrich TBA." (336 F. 2d at 762.) Instead, it found that Texaco dealers "are quite free to accept or reject" the oil company's "recommendation" to purchase sponsored TBA products (id. at 763).

The fundamental premise underlying this conclusion was the Court of Appeals' finding that there was "no basis in this record for the Commission's conclusion that Texaco has controlling economic power over its dealers" and that Texaco's "contracts with [its] dealers do not give rise" to an inference that it did. (Id. at 762.) In the court's view, the "promotional services" performed by Texaco were indistinguishable from, and no less lawful than, conventional salesmanship to wholly independent purchasers.

[3] We agree that the evidence challenged on the second appeal to the Commission is unnecessary to our decision and have stricken the Findings and Conclusions of the hearing examiner based upon it.

[4] Texaco, Inc. v. F.T.C., 336 F. 2d 754 (D.C. Cir. 1964).

This approach conflicted with that of the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, which affirmed the Commission's order in Goodyear.[5] For the Seventh Circuit the starting point for any realistic assessment of the nature and competitive effect of an oil company's "recommendations" under the sales commission plan was the economic power which the oil company possessed over its dealers and which derived from the contractual relationship between them. In its view, the "heart of this case is the economic power Atlantic possesses over its service station dealers" (331 F. 2d at 400). Such power was not at all dependent upon coercive tactics.[6] Rather, the "keystone" to that power could be found in the "lease and equipment loan contract with their short term and cancellation provisions." (Ibid.) Viewed in the context of these provisions, the "service station dealer is more of an economic serf than a businessman free to purchase the TBA of his choice." (Ibid.) Reaching an opposite conclusion from that of the District of Columbia Circuit in Texaco, the Seventh Circuit held (id. at 401):

[5] Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. v. F.T.C., 331 F. 2d 394 (7th Cir. 1964).

[6] The Seventh Circuit upheld the Commission's finding of coercion; the District of Columbia Circuit rejected it. The evidence of coercion in Texaco was no less substantial than that in Atlantic-Goodyear. The different results on appeal appear attributable to two factors: (1) the Seventh Circuit deferred to the hearing examiner's assessment of the witnesses' credibility, and (2) while only a few dealer witnesses testified to coercive tactics and a considerably larger number of dealers called by respondents testified to the contrary, the Seventh Circuit thought the hearing examiner correctly evaluated the entire testimony in light of the economic dependency of dealers upon the oil company. Review in the Supreme Court of the finding of coercion was not sought in Atlantic. To the extent respondents seek to distinguish this case from Atlantic on the presence or absence of coercion, we conclude that no such factual distinction exists; we do not disturb the examiner's finding of coercion which was based essentially on his assessment of the credibility of the witnesses. Universal Camera Corp. v. N.L.R.B., 340 U.S. 474, 495–96. However, as we point out below, the fundamental issue here—the legality of sales commission agreements between major oil and major rubber companies—does not turn on a finding of coercion, and we do not rest our decision upon it.

> "Atlantic's power to cause its dealers to carry either Goodyear or Firestone TBA does not depend upon overt coercive methods. The totality of facts surrounding the relationship between the oil company and the dealers points to one conclusion: the oil company is able to exert sufficient economic power over its dealers so that for all practical purposes they are required to carry sponsored TBA.
> "Atlantic says that its influence over its dealers to purchase sponsored TBA short of force, threat, or intimidation is lawful; that it may recommend high quality TBA to its dealers; and that such action serves a legitimate business purpose in the promotion of the sale of gasoline. This would be a persuasive argument except for the dealers' economic dependency upon the oil company. In that setting, recommendation is tantamount to command. Covert practices are as efficient as overt action. Sophisticated methods of pressuring the dealers into carrying sponsored TBA are as effectual as express covenants and open threats."

Supreme Court review was sought in both Texaco and Atlantic-Goodyear. The Commission, arguing that different dispositions of the two cases based upon narrow factual distinctions would be inappropriate, framed the issue presented by both cases in identical, broad terms, asking the Court to hold that:

> "[I]t is an unfair method of competition, in violation of Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, for a major rubber company > and a major oil company to enter into an agreement under which the oil company, in return for a commission, sponsors the sale of the rubber company's products to the oil company's retail dealers.'"

In both cases the Commission urged the same broad rationale reflected by the Commission and Seventh Circuit decisions in Goodyear: (1) Because of the gasoline dealer's singular dependence upon, and subservience to, his major oil company supplier, the oil company had the power to require its dealers to purchase substantial quantities of TBA without overt coercion; (2) the promotional services which the oil company was obligated to, and did, perform under the sales commission agreement constituted the exercise of that power for the benefit of the sponsored TBA supplier; and (3) as a result, the effect of the sales commission plan is like that of a tying agreement, foreclosing competing non-sponsoring suppliers from the substantial market of the sponsoring oil company's dealers.[8]

The Supreme Court reviewed the Atlantic-Goodyear case for the purpose of resolving the "apparent conflict" with Texaco (381 U.S. at 363). The Court affirmed the Seventh Circuit's decision, and a week later vacated the judgment of the District of Columbia Circuit in Texaco and ordered that the case be remanded to the Commission for reconsideration in light of the decision in Atlantic (F.T.C. v. Texaco, Inc., 381 U.S. 739).

II.

We turn then to the threshold question in this remand proceeding: What light is cast by the Supreme Court's decision in Atlantic upon the appropriate disposition of this case?

Reading its opinion against the background set forth above, we can draw only one conclusion: In upholding the Seventh Circuit and Commission decisions, the Supreme Court approved their broad rationale, rejected the approach taken by the District of Columbia Circuit in this case, and enunciated a rule which transcends the confines of the particular facts involved in Atlantic. In the Court's view, while coercive practices aggravate the restraint imposed by the sales commission plan, it is the oil company's power over its dealers, derived from the contractual relationship between them, and the utilization of that power through the performance of the promotional services required by the sales commission agreement, which renders the sales commission plan unlawful.

The starting point for the Supreme Court's analysis, like the Seventh Circuit's, is reflected in its emphasis upon the oil company's considerable economic power over its dealers. The Court said (381 U.S. at 368):

> "[Atlantic and its dealers] simply do not bargain as equals. Among the sources of leverage in Atlantic's hands are its lease and equipment loan contracts with their cancellation and short-term provisions. Only last term we described the power implications of such arrangements in Simpson v. Union Oil Co., 377 U.S. 13 (1964), and we need not repeat that discussion here. It must also be remembered that Atlantic controlled the supply of gasoline and oil to its wholesalers and dealers. This was an additional source of economic leverage. United States v. Loew's, Inc., 371 U.S. 38, 45 (1962) * * *"

In this context, "threats and coercive practices" merely "bolstered" the "lever" which resulted from this economic power (id. at 369). The Court viewed the oil company's aggressive and vigorous salesmanship in carrying out the sales commission plan, wholly apart from any coercive tactics, as an exertion of "the persuasion that is a natural incident of its economic power" (id. at 368), rather than as the "recommendations" of a salesman to an independent purchaser "free to accept or reject" them.

Accordingly, the Court accepted the Commission's and the Seventh Circuit's characterization that the sales commission contract, which obligated the oil company to use its power over its dealers to sell the sponsored rubber companies' TBA, had the same "central competitive characteristic" as a tying agreement—"the utilization of economic power in one market to curtail competition in another". (Id. at 369.) Indeed, in the Court's view, that was its primary if not sole purpose. Under the sales commission plan (as the records in both Atlantic and Texaco show), the oil company, without making any investment in distributional facilities or TBA inventory, and without relieving the TBA supplier of the burden of sales, distribution, and service, is nevertheless paid large commissions for its promotional efforts. Accordingly, the Court found that "it is difficult to escape the conclusion that there would have been little point in paying substantial commissions to oil companies were it not for their ability to exert power over their wholesalers and dealers * * *" (id. at 376).

In sum, the Supreme Court, in upholding the Commission's order prohibiting outright the use of the sales commission plan by Atlantic and Goodyear, was also affirming the rationale of the Commission's decision, which the Court described as follows (id. at 361):

> "[T]he Commission considered the coercive practices to be symptomatic of a more fundamental restraint of trade and found the sales-commission plan illegal in itself as 'a classic example of the use of economic power in one market * * * to destroy competition in another market * * *.'" [Emphasis supplied.]

At the same time the Supreme Court dispelled the ambiguities generated by the Commission's first decision in this proceeding. An assessment of the competitive effects of the sales commission plan does not require an analysis of "market data". Since the testimony only confirmed what was essentially implicit in the relationship between the oil company and its dealers—that the oil company's sponsorship under the sales commission plan has the competitive effect of foreclosing non-sponsored TBA suppliers from access to the market represented by the oil company's dealers—further market analysis is unnecessary. It is sufficient to show that a "not insubstantial portion of commerce is affected".*

* The Court said in this regard (id. at 371):

> "Goodyear and Atlantic contend that the Commission should have made a far more extensive economic analysis of the competitive effect of the sales-commission plan, examining the entire market in tires, batteries and accessories. But just as the effect of this plan is similar to that of a tie-in, so it is unnecessary to embark upon a full-scale economic analysis of competitive effect. We think it enough that the Commission found that a not insubstantial portion of commerce is affected."

Atlantic had, indeed based its contention that a more extensive economic analysis was necessary, in part, upon the Commission's first decision to remand Goodrich-Texaco to take evidence of "market data" for an assessment of the competitive effects of the sales commission plan. Atlantic Refining Co. v. F.T.C., supra, Brief of Petitioner The Atlantic Refining Company, pp. 31–32, 57, n. 43.

To be sure, the Supreme Court took note of the striking demonstration in Atlantic of both the extreme abuses attending Atlantic's use of the sales commission plan, and the dramatic effectiveness of the plan in foreclosing non-sponsored TBA suppliers from the Atlantic service station market. Atlantic was the first case before the Court involving a challenge to the sales commission plan; it presented for review a Commission decision whose rationale would render unlawful the sales commission plans themselves, whenever used by major oil and rubber companies. The Court, therefore, made a careful examination of the entire record to assess the "economic and business stuff out of which these arrangements emerge", so as to determine whether they are "naked restraints of trade with no purpose except stifling of competition" and whether "they may be too dangerous to sanction" (White Motor Co. v. United States, 372 U.S. 253, 263). But, like the Commission, the Court looked upon the dramatic aspects of Atlantic as "symptomatic" of a broader problem. Having examined, as reflected by the record in Atlantic, the dangers presented by sales commission plans, their essentially anticompetitive character, and the vivid demonstration of the abuses which may attend their use, the Court concluded more generally that the sales commission plan itself "amount[s] to a device that permits suppliers of tires, batteries and accessories, through the use of oil company power, to effectively sew up large markets" and, as such, could not be defended even though it might be an efficient and economic method of distribution (381 U.S. at 371). Consequently, the Court's ultimate concern was not limited to the sales commission plan involved in Atlantic, but was rather with "the destructive effect on commerce that would result from the widespread use of these [sales commission] contracts by major oil companies and [TBA] suppliers" (ibid.).

The Court's concern in Atlantic with the dangers presented by the "widespread use" of the sales commission plans by major oil and TBA suppliers is especially significant. Atlantic was not, as the Court was well aware, an isolated case. In Texaco, in which a petition for certiorari was pending at the time of the Court's decision in Atlantic, the record showed that Texaco entered into sales commission plans with three of the leading rubber companies—Goodrich, Firestone and, under an agreement instituted about the time this proceeding began, U.S. Rubber Company. Goodrich also had sales commission plans with Continental Oil Company and other oil companies as well. The Firestone and Goodyear-Atlantic cases show that both Goodyear and Firestone have sales commission plans with Shell and Atlantic; that in addition, Goodyear has sales commission plans with Sinclair Refining Company, Richfield Oil Company, and a number of other oil companies; and that Firestone, in addition to its sales commission plan with Texaco, has sales commission arrangements with Union Oil Company, Continental Oil Company, and others.

The service station dealer outlets affected by these sales commission plans constitute a vast market for the sale of TBA; and at the same time only the largest rubber companies are the beneficiaries of the marketing advantages derived from the sales commission plans, a fact which would appear to confirm the Commission's finding in Atlantic that smaller TBA suppliers are unable to utilize the sales commission arrangement (58 F.T.C. at 307). Given the Court's view of the fundamentally anticompetitive character of the sales commission plan when used by oil companies possessing power over their dealers, the proliferation of these plans between major oil companies and major rubber companies constitutes in itself an acute danger for competition. It was in this context that the Court, looking beyond Atlantic, and the specific facts involved there, concluded that generally the use of the sales commission plan by major oil companies and major rubber companies, whatever its economic advantages, is a practice "too dangerous to sanction".

This conclusion is buttressed as much by what the Court did, as by what it said. The Court's affirmance of the Commission's order prohibiting outright the use of sales commission plans by Atlantic and Goodyear not only between themselves but with other companies had broad competitive consequences in both the TBA and petroleum markets. If the Court's decision were to be read as limiting the Commission in its evaluation of other sales commission plans to the specific factual circumstances involved in Atlantic, one major oil and one major rubber company would be prohibited not only from further engaging in coercive tactics, but from using a sales commission plan which its major competitors might still be free to use.

For example, at the present time, it would appear that three of the largest rubber companies, Goodrich, Firestone, and U.S. Rubber, use sales commission plans providing Texaco sponsorship to promote their TBA products to Texaco's dealers. Yet, Goodyear could not ask Texaco (even assuming that Texaco has demonstrated no propensity to use coercive tactics in performing its other sales commission plans) to perform for it the same promotional service which Texaco performs for Goodyear's three major competitors. At the same time, Texaco, one of the largest oil companies, without making any investment in distributional facilities or TBA inventory, receives substantial commissions for the sale of TBA products to its service stations. Atlantic, a major oil company but substantially smaller than Texaco, is barred from the same economic opportunity, no matter how scrupulously it might refrain from coercive tactics in the future. Yet, the same kinds of leases, equipment loan contracts, and sales agreements stressed by the Court in Atlantic also render Texaco dealers economically subservient to, and dependent upon, Texaco; and its sales commission plans require Texaco to perform the same kind of vigorous promotional campaign described in Atlantic. To bar only Atlantic and Goodyear from the use of the sales commission plan would thus not only create a harmful competitive imbalance among the leading firms of the two industries, it would be arbitrary and inequitable.

The Supreme Court was informed of the harmful and anomalous consequence of a rule confined to the particular facts of Atlantic.[10] We find nothing which would permit us to read the Court's opinion, or its

[10] The Government in its petition for certiorari in Texaco told the Court:

> "Even if the cases [Atlantic and Texaco] could be distinguished on their facts, the conflict, if unresolved, would create an anomalous situation in which one major oil company and a large tire company were permitted to employ essentially the same marketing practice that their competitors were prohibited from using."

F.T.C. v Texaco, Inc., 381 U.S. 739, Petition for a Writ of Certiorari, p. 12.

Similarly, Atlantic told the Supreme Court that:

> "The order in each of the two cases represents a rule of general application, not the disposition of an isolated controversy. The rule should be uniform throughout the industry. Moreover, Atlantic and Texaco are competitors; and Atlantic, the smaller company, should not be under a marketing handicap as against Texaco, which is three times larger."

remand order in this proceeding, as sanctioning such results.

III.

In our view the Supreme Court's decision in Atlantic compels the conclusion that the Texaco-Goodrich plan is an unfair method of competition and that Texaco and Goodrich should be prohibited, as were Atlantic and Goodyear, from performing or entering into any other sales commission plans. The Court's concern for the dangers which derived from a widespread use of the sales commission plan is especially relevant here. As has been pointed out, Texaco is considerably larger than Atlantic. Its service station dealers constitute an even more significant TBA market. Stations operated by Texaco's lessee dealers [11] and contract dealers [12] constituted 16.5% of the service stations in the United States in the year 1955. In that year, Texaco had approximately six times as many contract and lessee dealers as Atlantic.[13]

Moreover, as we have noted, in Atlantic the total sales to Atlantic dealers of Goodyear and Firestone products for the six-year period June 1950–June 1956 amounted to about $50 million. Goodrich and Firestone sold almost $60 million in TBA products to Texaco

[11] A lessee station (referred to as a C station) is one that is either owned or leased by Texaco and in turn leased by it to the dealer.

[12] A contract station (referred to as D stations) is either owned by the operator or leased by him from someone other than Texaco. In addition to selling gasoline directly through C and D stations, Texaco sells indirectly through consignees (B accounts) and independent distributors (E accounts), who operate bulk storage plants, purchase Texaco products and sell them to service station dealers and consumers.

[13] In 1955 Texaco had approximately 30,000 contract and lessee dealer stations; Atlantic had approximately 5,000 service stations. 381 U.S. at 368.

dealers in the year 1956 alone. In the five-year period 1952–1956, the sales of the sponsored Goodrich and Firestone TBA to Texaco amounted to approximately $245 million.

The economic dependence of Texaco dealers is no different from that of Atlantic dealers. Thus, Texaco lessee dealers, who constitute the most important segment of service station TBA outlets, have the same kind of short term leases, renewable on a year-to-year basis and terminable at year's end upon ten days' notice of either party. These leases contain the same kind of general "housekeeping" requirements concerning the station's use, maintenance and appearance which, if breached, can result in immediate cancellation by Texaco without notice to the lessee. The lessees have often made a considerable investment in their stations, at times, on funds borrowed from Texaco. "Contract dealers", who own their stations or lease them from third parties, nevertheless lease their pumps and other equipment from Texaco. Both lessee and contract dealers purchase their gasoline pursuant to an "Agreement of Sale", prescribing annual minimum and maximum purchases at current Texaco prices. These "Agreements of Sale" also are generally on a year-to-year basis, terminable at year's end upon thirty days' notice, and automatically cancelled if a lessee dealer's lease is terminated.

In these circumstances, the competitive advantage given a TBA supplier whose products are sponsored by Texaco need hardly depend upon the use of overtly coercive tactics. Here, as in Atlantic, Texaco's "promotional" efforts in carrying out its sales commission agreement with Goodrich and Firestone constitute a forceful exercise of its economic power over its dealers. Its consequence is to impress upon Texaco dealers, through constant repetition and in a variety of ways, that Texaco, whose favor the dealer must court, has a strong interest in their purchase of the sponsored TBA products.

Even before the dealer has been accepted, Texaco begins its campaign on behalf of the sponsored TBA products. Texaco personnel, when interviewing prospective dealers for new or established service stations, advised them of the importance of TBA, recommending the TBA products of Goodrich and Firestone. Once the dealer is selected, and before he opens his station, Texaco frequently informs Goodrich and Firestone of the prospective opening of his station, affording Goodrich and Firestone a head start over competitors in the initiation of their own sales campaign on behalf of their products. Thereafter, Texaco, often with the direct assistance and participation of the rubber companies, maintains a continuous campaign designed to induce the dealer to purchase the sponsored TBA products. Dealer meetings and training courses designed to educate the dealer in the use of TBA products utilize the products of the sponsored companies. Texaco participates in the sponsored companies' seasonal and special sales, promotional and advertising campaigns. Texaco publications sent to its dealers carry displays of the sponsored TBA products. And, perhaps most effective of all, the Texaco salesman continually carries the message in his day-to-day contacts with the dealers. In this regard, it is important to remember that these Texaco salemen, who are most directly involved in pushing the sponsored TBA products, also play a critical role in the annual dealer evaluations and in the determination of whether the dealer's lease and contractual relations with Texaco are to be renewed. At the same time, Texaco, in making promotions, evaluates these salesmen's performances in part by their success in selling sponsored TBA products.

Frequently, both the Texaco and rubber company salesmen call upon the dealer together ("double teaming"). The Supreme Court in Atlantic noted the inherently coercive effect of that device, pointing out that since "the annual dealer evaluation by Atlantic salesmen carried substantial weight when the district managers decided upon annual lease extensions * * * dealers were * * * understandably susceptible to the encouragement of Goodyear salesmen when Atlantic men were nearby looking over their shoulders." (381 U.S. at 375.) And, as in Atlantic, each dealer's performance as a purchaser of sponsored TBA is also fully disclosed by the reports furnished by the sponsored rubber companies to Texaco of the amount of sponsored TBA purchased by each dealer. As the record indicates, Texaco, in assessing the economic success of service stations, was vitally concerned with the amount of sponsored TBA sold by its dealers.

Here, as in Atlantic, there was substantial testimony by non-sponsored TBA suppliers confirming the conclusion that, as a result of Texaco's vigorous sales campaign to its dealers, many Texaco dealers were left with the impression that Texaco would look with disfavor upon their purchase of non-sponsored TBA products and that they were required to purchase the sponsored TBA. As a result, these non-sponsored suppliers were unable to gain access to these Texaco service station outlets. In sum, the Supreme Court's characterization of the operation of the sales commission plan in Atlantic is equally applicable here. Texaco, with Goodrich's "encouragement and assistance, has marshalled its full economic power in a continuing campaign to force its dealers and wholesalers to buy [Goodrich] products" (id. at 371).

Respondents argue that there are a number of factual distinctions between this case and Atlantic. But as we read Atlantic none of these distinctions is material. As already demonstrated, under Atlantic it is the oil company's power over its dealers, and the exercise of that power through the performance of the promotional services required by the sales commission agreement, and not coercive tactics, which condemns the sales commission plan. And while, unlike Atlantic, the sales commission plans involved here did not allocate territories between the sponsored TBA suppliers, the gravest danger to competition presented by the sales commission plans here as in Atlantic is in their capacity for hindering competition between sponsored and non-sponsored TBA suppliers. A device which may enhance the position of two or three leading TBA suppliers vis-a-vis smaller competitors cannot be defended on the ground that it still leaves these few firms free to "compete" with one another for access to the Texaco service station market.

Respondents also argue that, unlike Atlantic, there is here no showing that Texaco's promotional campaign was effective. Thus, they contend that the statistics show that only about 30% of Texaco's dealers purchased sponsored TBA products. This figure, however, is derived by considering the number of Texaco dealers purchasing sponsored TBA in proportion to the total number of lessee and contract dealers. In fact, however, as respondent Goodrich, itself, points out,[14] many contract dealers do not handle, and are not appropriate outlets for, TBA products. Since more than half of the total number of Texaco dealers are made up of contract dealers, the actual success of [14] Brief of Respondent The B. F. Goodrich Company, In Answer to Appeal Brief of Counsel Supporting the Complaint, dated March 28, 1960, p. 28.

Texaco's sales commission plans would appear to be considerable indeed. But, under Atlantic, proof of the actual effectiveness of the sales commission plan is unnecessary. The Court's ultimate concern was with the cumulative danger presented by the "widespread use" of the plans, rather than the relative effectiveness of particular plans. Moreover, the Court viewed the sales commission plan when used by a major oil company as having the same competitive characteristics as a tying agreement. As in the case of a tying agreement, the fact that the sales commission plan has not fully achieved its purpose, or that nonsponsored suppliers can overcome the unfair competitive advantage which the sales commission gives the sponsored supplier, is no defense. Cf. International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U.S. 392, 397; Northern Pacific R. Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 12; Osborn v. Sinclair Refining Co., 286 F. 2d 832, 838 (4th Cir. 1960), cert. denied 366 U.S. 963.

In essence, respondents urge upon us the rationale of the District of Columbia Circuit's opinion—that despite the economic dependence of the Texaco dealer upon Texaco, Texaco's vigorous promotional activities under the sales commission plan are nothing more than the "recommendations" of a salesman to a purchaser "free to accept or reject" them. In affirming the Seventh Circuit's decision in Atlantic, the Supreme Court rejected that position.

IV.

We think that orders against both Texaco and Goodrich, identical with the orders against Atlantic and Goodyear which were affirmed by the Supreme Court, are appropriate here. Texaco should clearly be enjoined from entering into or performing any sales commission plan. As to Goodrich, like Goodyear, it was "no silent or inactive partner in the implementation of the sales-commission plan" (381 U.S. at 373). As the record demonstrates, the sales commission plan here is essentially a joint effort in which the massive power of a major rubber company and a major oil company is united, to the disadvantage of non-sponsored competitors, behind the sale of the rubber company's TBA products. Goodrich now has sales commission plans with five other oil companies: Continental, Shell-American, Jenney, Ohio Oil and Emblem. Its sales commission plans with these companies are substantially the same as those it has with Texaco. There is nothing in this record to indicate that these oil companies do not also have the kind of economic power possessed by Texaco over its dealers. We would not be justified in concluding that any of these other plans, unlike Goodrich's plan with Texaco, was not an attempt to buy the economic power of the oil company over its dealers in order to obtain an unfair competitive advantage over competing rubber companies. The order therefore prohibits Goodrich from entering into or carrying out any sales commission plan. If Goodrich should come forward with facts establishing that it has a sales commission plan with any oil company which does not possess economic power over its dealers, the proceeding can always be reopened for such modification of the order as may be warranted. Docket No. 6485

In the Matter of The B. F. Goodrich Company, and The Texas Company, corporations.

FINAL ORDER

By its order dated June 16, 1965, the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit remanded this case to the Commission for further proceedings in conformity with the opinion of the Supreme Court herein dated June 7, 1965. Pursuant thereto, the Commission heard oral argument and received written briefs, and fully considered, on the basis of the entire record, all questions of fact and law presented by the appeals from the hearing examiner's revised initial decision of September 24, 1962. For the reasons stated in the accompanying opinion of the Commission,

IT IS ORDERED that:

A.

The revised initial decision of the hearing examiner be, and it hereby is, modified as follows:

(1) Findings 10(b), 32, 33, 34, and conclusion 7 are stricken.

(2) The first sentence of finding 8 is deleted, and the following is substituted therefor: "Tires, batteries, and accessories have become a necessary and integral part of the business operation of the ordinary Texaco dealer, and in particular for Texaco's lessee dealers."

(3) The last sentence of finding 20 is deleted and the following is substituted therefor: "It would be unusual to expect that a Texaco salesman would vigorously insist to a dealer that he had a right to buy wherever he might wish when Texaco's evaluation of the salesman's performance was in part based upon his success in selling sponsored TBA products to the dealer."

(4) The second sentence in finding 26 is deleted, and the following is substituted therefor: "There are written contracts with Texaco, Conoco, and Ohio-Marathon, but there are no formal contracts with the other three oil companies, which are smaller local concerns. Shell-American and Jenney operate generally with only service station customers selling at the retail level, but without wholesale outlets such as consignees, jobbers, and distributors."

(5) The second sentence in finding 30 is deleted, and the following is substituted therefor: "From 1952 to the end of 1955, the number of Conoco leased stations increased from 1,138 to 1,765."

(6) The last sentence of finding 31, and the chart immediately below, are deleted, and the following substituted therefor: "Outlets of the additional oil companies having sales commission contracts with Goodrich during the years 1953–55 were as follows:

	12-31-53	12-31-54	12-31-55
Conoco	1061	1272	1508
Shell-American	53	66	60
Jenney Mfg	138	188	201
Ohio Oil	594	666	804
Emblem	30	9	25
	1876	2201	2598"

(7) The first sentence of conclusion 5 is deleted, and the following is substituted therefor: "Practically all of the representatives of the competitors of Goodrich called as witnesses testified generally that they had difficulty in selling TBA to Texaco stations and testified specifically as to the reasons given by certain Texaco dealers for not buying or selling their TBA items."

B.

The hearing examiner's revised initial decision of September 24, 1962, as hereinabove modified and supplemented by the accompanying opinion, and the order contained in said revised initial decision be, and they hereby are, adopted as the decision and order of the Commission.

OPINION

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

No. 24.—October Term, 1968.

Federal Trade Commission, Petitioner, v. Texaco, Inc., et al.	On Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.

[December 16, 1968.]

Mr. Justice Black delivered the opinion of the Court.

The question presented by this case is whether the FTC was warranted in finding that it was an unfair method of competition in violation of § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act for respondent Texaco to undertake to induce its service station dealers to purchase Goodrich tires, batteries, and accessories (hereafter referred to as TBA) in return for a commission paid by Goodrich to Texaco. In three related proceedings instituted in 1961, the Commission challenged the sales commission method of distributing TBA and in each case named as a respondent a major oil company and a major tire manufacturer. After extensive hearings, the Commission concluded that each of the arrangements constituted an unfair method of competition and ordered each tire company and each oil company to refrain from entering into any such commission arrangements. In one of these cases, Atlantic Refining Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 381 U. S. 357 (1964), this Court affirmed the decision of the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit sustaining the Commission's order against Atlantic Refining Company and the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company. In a second case, Shell Oil Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 360 F. 2d 470, cert. denied, 385 U. S. 1002, the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, following this Court's decision in Atlantic, sustained the Commission's order against the Shell Oil Company and the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company. In contrast to the decisions of these two Courts of Appeal, the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia set aside the Commission's order in this, the third of the three cases, involving respondents Goodrich and Texaco. 336 F. 2d 754 (1964).[1] The Commission petitioned this Court for review and, one week following our Atlantic decision, we granted certiorari and remanded for further consideration in light of that opinion. 381 U. S. 739 (1965). The Commission, on remand, reaffirmed its conclusion that the Texaco-Goodrich arrangement, like that involved in the other two cases, violated § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act. The Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia again reversed, this time holding that the Commission had failed to establish that Texaco had exercised its dominant economic power over its dealers or that the Texaco-Goodrich arrangement had an adverse effect on competition. 383 F. 2d 942. We granted certiorari to determine whether the court below had correctly applied the principles of our Atlantic decision.

Congress enacted § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act to combat in their incipiency trade practices that exhibit a strong potential for stifling competition. In large measure the task of defining "unfair methods of competition" was left to the Commission. The legislative history shows that Congress concluded that the best check on unfair competition would be "an administrative body of practical men . . . who will be able to apply the rule enacted by Congress to particular business situations, so as to eradicate evils with the least risk of interfering with legitimate business operations." H. R. Conf. Rep. No. 1142, 63d Cong., 2d Sess., 19. Atlantic Refining Co. v. FTC, 351 U. S. 357, 367. While the ultimate responsibility for the construction of this statute rests with the courts, we have held on many occasions that the determinations of the Commission, an expert body charged with the practical application of the statute, are entitled to great weight. FTC v. Motion Picture Advertising Serv. Co., — U. S. 392, 396 (1953); FTC v. Cement Institute, 333 U. S. 683, 720 (1948). This is especially true here, where the Commission has had occasion in three related proceedings to study and assess the effects on competition of the sales commission arrangement for marketing TBA. With this in mind, we turn to the facts of this case.

The Commission and the respondents agree that the Texaco-Goodrich arrangement for marketing TBA will fall under the rational of our Atlantic decision if the Commission was correct in its three ultimate conclusions that (1) Texaco has dominant economic power over its dealers; (2) that Texaco exercises that power over its dealers in fulfilling its agreement to promote and sponsor Goodrich products; and (3) that anticompetitive effects result from the exercise of that power.

That Texaco holds dominant economic power over its dealers is clearly shown by the record in this case. In fact, Texaco does not contest the conclusion of the Court of Appeals below and the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in Shell that such power is "inherent in the structure and economics of the petroleum distribution system." 383 F. 2d 942, 946 (C. A. D. C. Cir.); 360 F. 2d 470, 481 (C. A. 5th Cir.). Nearly 40% of the Texaco dealers lease their stations from Texaco. These dealers typically hold a one-year lease on their stations, and these leases are subject to termination at the end of any year on 10 days notice. At any time during the year a man's lease on his service station may be immediately terminated by Texaco without advance notice if in Texaco's judgment any of the "house-keeping" provisions of the lease, relating to the use and appearance of the station, are not fulfilled. The contract under which Texaco dealers receive their vital supply of gasoline and other petroleum products also runs from year to year and is terminable on 30 days notice under Texaco's standard form contract. The average dealer is a man of limited means who has what is for him a sizable investment in his station. He stands to lose much if he incurs the ill will of Texaco. As Judge Wisdom wrote in Shell, "A man operating a gas station is bound to be overawed by the great corporation that is his supplier, his banker, and his landlord." 360 F. 2d 470, 487.

It is against the background of this dominant economic power over the dealers that the sales commission arrangement must be viewed. The Texaco-Goodrich agreement provides that Goodrich will pay Texaco a commission of 10% on all purchases by Texaco service station dealers of Goodrich TBA. In return, Texaco agrees to "promote the sale of Goodrich products" to Texaco dealers. During the five-year period studied by the Commission (1952–1956) $245,000,000 of the Goodrich and Firestone TBA sponsored by Texaco was purchased by Texaco dealers, for which Texaco received almost $22,000,000 in commissions. Evidence before the Commission showed that Texaco carried out its agreement to promote Goodrich products through constantly reminding its dealers of Texaco's desire that they stock and sell the sponsored Goodrich TBA. Texaco emphasizes the importance of TBA and the recommended brands as early as its initial interview with a prospective dealer and repeats its recommendation through a steady flow of campaign materials utilizing Goodrich products. Texaco salesmen, the primary link between Texaco and the dealers, promote Goodrich products in their day-to-day contact with the Texaco dealers. The evaluation of a dealer's station by the Texaco salesman is often an important factor in determining whether a dealer's contract or lease with Texaco will be renewed. Thus the Texaco salesmen, whose favorable opinion is so important to every dealer, are the key men in the promotion of Goodrich products, and on occasion accompany the Goodrich salesmen in their calls on the dealers. Finally, Texaco receives regular reports on the amount of sponsored TBA purchased by each dealer. Texaco contends, however, that these reports are used only for maintaining its accounts with Goodrich and not for policing dealer purchases.

Texaco urges that the facts of this case are fundamentally different from those involved in Atlantic because of the presence there, and the absence here, of "overt coercive practices" designed to force the dealers to purchase the sponsored brand of TBA. We agree, as the Government concedes, that the evidence in this case regarding coercive practices is considerably less substantial that the evidence presented in Atlantic. The Atlantic record contained direct evidence of dealers threatened with cancellation of their leases, the setting of dealer quotas for purchase of certain amounts of sponsored TBA, the requirement that dealers purchase TBA from single assigned supply points, refusals by Atlantic to honor credit card charges for nonsponsored TBA and policing of Atlantic dealers by "phantom inspectors." While the evidence in the present case fails to establish the kind of overt coercive acts shown in Atlantic, we think it clear nonetheless that Texaco's dominant economic power was used in a manner which tended to foreclose competition in the marketing of TBA. The sales commission system for marketing TBA is inherently coercive. A service station dealer whose very livelihood depends upon the continuing good favor of a major oil company is constantly aware of the oil company's desire that he stock and sell the recommended brand of TBA. Through the constant reminder of the Texaco salesman, through demonstration projects and promotional materials, through all of the dealer's contacts with Texaco, he learns the lesson that Texaco wants him to purchase for his station the brand of TBA which pays Texaco 10% on every item the dealer buys. With the dealer's supply of gasoline, his lease on his station, and his Texaco identification subject to continuing review, we think it flies in the face of common sense to say, as Texaco asserts, that the dealer is "perfectly free" to reject Texaco's chosen brand of TBA. Equally applicable here is this Court's judgment in Atlantic that "It is difficult to escape the conclusion that there would be little point in paying substantial commissions to oil companies were it not for their ability to exert power over their wholesalers and dealers." 381 U. S., at 376.

We are similarly convinced that the Commission was correct in determining that this arrangement has an adverse effect on competition in the marketing of TBA. Service stations play an increasingly important role in the marketing of tires, batteries, and other automotive accessories. With five major companies supplying virtually all of the tires that come with new cars, only in the replacement market can the smaller companies hope to compete. Ideally, each service station dealer would stock the brands of TBA that in his judgment were most favored by customers for price and quality. To the extent that dealers are induced to select the sponsored brand in order to maintain the good favor of the oil company upon which they are dependent, to that extent the operation of the competitive market is adversly affected. As we noted in Atlantic, the essential anticompetitive vice of such an arrangement is "the utilization of economic power in one market to curtail competition in another." 381 U. S. 357, 369. Here the TBA manufacturer has purchased the oil company's economic power and used it as a partial substitute for competitive merit in gaining a major share of the TBA market.[2] The nonsponsored brands do not compete on the even terms of price and quality competition; they must overcome, in addition, the influence of the dominant oil company that has been paid to induce its dealers to buy the recommended brand. While the success of this arrangement in foreclosing competitors from the TBA market has not matched that of the direct coercion employed by Atlantic, we feel that the anticompetitive tendencies of such a system are clear, and that the Commission was properly fulfilling the task that Congress assigned it in halting this practice in its incipiency. The Commission is not required to show that a practice it condemns has totally eliminated competition in the relevant market. It is enough that the Commission found that practice in question unfairly burdened competition for a not insignificant volume of commerce. International Salt Co. v. United States, 332 U. S. 392 (1947); United States v. Loew's, Inc., 371 U. S. 38, 45, n. 4 (1962); Atlantic Refining Co. v. FTC, 381 U. S. 357, 371 (1964).

The Commission was justified in concluding that more than an insubstantial amount of commerce was involved. Texaco is one of the nation's largest petroleum companies. It sells its products to approximately 30,000 service stations, or about 16.5% of all service stations in the United States. The volume of sponsored TBA purchased by Texaco dealers in the five-year period 1952-1956 was $245,000,000, five times the amount involved in the Atlantic case.

[2] The Commission's conclusion that under a sales commission plan, a dealer would not make his choice solely on the basis of competitive merit was bolstered by the testimony of 31 sellers of competing, nonsponsored TBA that they were unable to sell to particular Texaco stations because of the dealers' concern that Texaco would disapprove of their purchase of nonsponsored products.

For the reasons stated above, we reverse the judgment below and remand to the Court of Appeals for enforcement of the Commission's order with the exception of paragraphs five and six of the order against Texaco, the setting aside of which by the Court of Appeals the Government does not contest.

Reversed and remanded.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

No. 24.—October Term, 1968.

Federal Trade Commission, Petitioner, v., Texaco, Inc., et al.	On Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.

[December 16, 1968.]

Mr. Justice Harlan, concurring.

I join the Court's opinion, with the following statement. To the extent that my action in joining today's opinion is inconsistent with my action in joining Brother Stewart's dissent in Atlantic Rfg. Co. v. FTC, 381 U. S. 357, 377 (1965), candor compels me to say that further reflection has convinced me that the portions of the Commission's order which the Court today sustains were within the authority granted to the Commission under § 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

No. 24.—October Term, 1968.

Federal Trade Commission, Petitioner, v. Texaco, Inc., et al.	On Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.

[December 16, 1968.]

Mr. Justice Stewart, dissenting.

We are told today that "[t]he sales commission system for marketing TBA is inherently coercive." If that is so, then the Court went to a good deal of unnecessary trouble in Atlantic Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 381 U. S. 357, 368, to establish that Atlantic "not only exerted the persuasion that is a natural incident of its economic power, but coupled it with direct and overt threats of reprisal . . . ."

The Court acknowledges that "the evidence in this case regarding coercive practices is considerably less substantial than the evidence presented in Atlantic." But that is an understatement. For the fact is that in this case the Court of Appeals was totally unable to "find that Texaco used its controlling economic power to compel its dealers to purchase sponsored TBA." 383 F. 2d 942, 949. That is why this Court must perforce create today's per se rule of "inherent" coercion.

For the reasons set out at some length in my separate opinion in Atlantic, supra, at 377, I cannot agree to any such per se rule. Accordingly, I would affirm the judgment of the Court of Appeals.
